This, our age of science and literature should be an age, not only frought with truth and justice, but one in which, the sciences and the arts should make their marks and leave deep furrows plowed.—There is a work for all, and all should lend a hand—our country demands it and ourselves will be profited by it. We who are born in a free country, breathing the air of liberty, looked upon by all nations as a model republic, rest under great responsibilities, the link that binds us to our Creator has been shortened, it no longer binds man to a reverence of folly, but softens his nature by exercising some of his higher powers and thus make mind minister to happiness. Science offers to us new relms, new wonders are continually unfolding themselves and as the field of vision enlarges other views are presented There still remains beyond the visible and the certain, the invisible and mysterious; science must and will unravel it. ALEX.

Terrible Catastrophe.

About 8 o'clock last evening a terrible catastrophe took place at No. 308 Main street. An explosion occurred in a room in a three story brick building occupied by Mr. James Pryor, a scenic artist and manufacturer of properties, and in an instant the whole house was in ruins.—The partition walls were blown to pieces, the floor shattered to atoms, and the rear wall of the building thrown to the ground. The fire bells immediately sounded an alarm, and soon an immense crowd of persons was upon groud. As soon as possible the ruins were searched for those known to be under them. Mr. Pryor was taken out in a dreadful condition, his body being burned and mangled. He was carried to the drug store of Dr. Bakkaus, where everything possible was done for his relief, and was afterward conveyed to the hospital. James Richards was also taken out, but found not to be seriously injured.

Though a number of persons were in the house at the time, these were the only two caught in the ruins or injured by the explosion. The damage to property is very large. The house owned by Hepworth is damaged to the amount of several thousand dollars. P. Volken, frame manufacturer, has lost about $1,000, and a number of other tenants a small amount. Pryor always had a penchant for pyrotechnics, and though unfortunate in his experiments, perserved until he met with this disaster. He was thought last night to be beyond recovery, but he is still alive this morning, and it is he will survive the injuries.

The catastrophe was generally supposed to have been caused by the explosion of gunpowder, but investigations since made lead to a different opinion. Pryor had been positively forbidden to manufacture fireworks of any description on the premises, and it is not that he attempted to violate this injunction.

Yesterday he purchased a quantity of chloride of potassa, phosphorus and Venice turpentine, with which he made some experiments. Those acquainted with these substances are of opinion, that the damage was caused by the explosion of the former. Powder explodes upward, and potassa downward, and it is evident that the floor of Pryor's room received the greatest shock, being forced to the story below. He states himself that he had a quantity of rocket composition in his room, but those acquainted with its ingredients declare it would not have made the wreck this explosion has.

About 3 o'clock this morning, an inner wall wall of the building fell with a great crash, causing another alarm in the neighborhood. It was soon discovered that no one was injured. About 4 o'clock the ruins took fire, which caused the alarm at that hour. The fire department was soon upon the ground, and speedily extinguished the flames.

WAGON ROAD OVER THE WESTERN PLAINS.—From a private letter received by gentleman of this city, dated Independendence, Missouri, on the 1st of July, we learn that a portion of the Wagon Road Expedition under William M. F. Magraw, had taken up the line of march, and that the remainder would follow immediately. Thirty wagons and the larger portion of the force of one hundred and twenty men were upon the plains.—The equipments of this expediton are complete and much is expected from the well corps of Messers. Magraw, Antan, and Lander, the superintendent, disbursing agent and engineer of the expidition.—This route has been designnated by the Department of the Interior as the Fort Kearney, South Pass, and Honey Lake Pacific Wagon Road. Arrangements are being made by the superintendent to have all communications for any of the party forwarded to him from Independence, and letters should be directed to his care at Independence, to insure their reaching the party at any point on the line.—*Nat. ☞ The Great Centre It is well known the Madler, the successor to Mr. Struve, in the direction of the observatory of Dopart. has after a profound examination come to the conclusion that Alchyone, the principle star in the groupe of the Pleiades now occupies the centre of gravity, and is at present the sun about which the universe of stars composing our astral system are revolving.

So that modern science has discovered at last what are the sweet influences of Pleiades the question so beautifully put by the psalmist.

General News.

NEW YORK, July 11.

The North Star sailed for Southampton and Bremen. It took out nearly 300 passengers and $166,000 specie. Among her passengers are G. W. White, U. S Consul to Lyons, J. R. Dillon, U. S. Consul to Bremen, Monsieur Paros, the French Railroad swindler, and Christy's old Band of Minstrels.

The steamship Edinburgh sailed for Glasgow with 140 passengers.

FRANCE.—It was intimated that Gen Cavaignac would rather not present himself a second time to the electors of Paris and that propositions had been made to distinguished members of the Paris Bar to take his place. but they were not accepted. Several of the defeated opposition members threaten to contest the regularity of the returns of their opponents.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says that the Italians whose arrest were noticed by the last mail will be tried for conspiracy to assasinate the Emperor.

The Daily News says, although Lord Clarendon has not official information of the facts yet it is nevertheless true that the French Goverament have entered into a contract with the Marseilles House, for a supply of 10,000 Africans, for Gaudaloupe, and Martinque, Spain

The Madrid correspondence of the London Times says, that Senor Laraque, the Mexican Evoy, had handed to Senor Pedal a sort of ultimatum for the settlement of the difficulties and that the latter had promised to send a counter memorandum, on the nature of which would depend much of Senor Lafraque's stay in Madrid,

The same correspondent also gives rumor that letters of marque, had been sent from Mexico to the United States in anticipation of war.

CHINA.—The dates from Canton are to May the 8th.

Several attempts were made to blow up the Ships there. One of which was nearly successful. No military operations could be undertaken before October 1st, owing to the heat of the weather. The dates from Foo Choo are to the 20th of April and mention the near approach of the rebels, causing the merchants and wealthy people considerable uneasiness, and who are removing their property.—A stoppage of trade was anticipated and no operations in the Tea trade could be carried on for the next season.

The India overland mails had arrived in London with voluminous accounts of the Teleg announcementof the mutinty in the India army. The details are somewhat less alarming than the bare telegraph accounts. Every precaution had been taken to trample out the first spark of treason. The London Commercial Daily List had learned that a report was current in well informed quarters, that the Government was in possession of news from India that tranquillity had been restored.

NEW YORK, July 13.

The steamer Star of the West arrived from Aspinwall with $1,500,000 specie.

The Granada sailed on Saturday from Havana with the U. S. steamer Roanoke, having on board 250 of Walker's men, two thirds sick.

Nothing particular from California—The crops in the Southern part of the State are suffering severely from drought.

Gen. Lane has been re elected Delegate to Congress from Oregon by a largely reduced majority.

Advices from Peru state that Vivanco still holds Arequipa.

Nicaragua was still unsettled. Rivas refuses to act in Concert with the Allied Generals. and the collision was expected soon, between the Leon party who favor Walker and the Chamirstas. The Star of the West connected with the Golden age from San Francisco the 20th, which brought down nearly $2,000,000 specie. The latter passed on the 25th the Steamer Sonora, with passengers and mails from New York. of June 5th, and on the 3d of July, passed the John L. Stevens, with the mails of June 20th. The Cala Markets were generally dull. Breadstuffs depressed, Crops on the average are promising. Money is active, Mining operations active and increasing largely.

We are informed that a report had reached Greytown, to the effect that a large force had arrived at San Juan del Sur from California to assist Walker, consisting of two vessels with 600 men with arms and ammunition. The report is psobably correct, as it is known that the Ocean Bird sailed from San Francisco a month ago with a load of fillibusters.

NEW ORLEANS, July 11.

The steamer Texas arrived with Vera Cruz dates to the 7th and from the City of Mexico to the 3d,

The local elections generally were favorable to the Government,

The papers are filled with discussions against Santa Anna.

The steamer Comet arrived at Vera Cruz on the 6th and left on the 7th.

CHICAGO, July 13.

A distillery, owned by Curtis & Ballantyne, was destroyed by fire on Saturday night. Loss estimated at $30,000. No insurance.

NEW YORK, 13

In the Supreme Court this morning, Judge Roosevelt dissolved the injunction restraining Mr. Conover for interfering with the books and documents of the st', commissioner. The case then came before Judge Peabody on the writ of certiorari, but he declined to proceed further until after hearing the counsel.

St. Louis, July 14.

Capt. Wharton, from Fort Kearney reports that advices have been received at that Fort that Sumner's command was eighty miles from Fort Laramie. All well. No truth in the report that part of Sumner's command had been cut off.

UTICA, July 14.

For four hours the flames have been making havoc at the New York State Asylum in this city.

The fire was discovered about 7½ o'clock this morning on the cornice of the southwest corner of the main building It is supposed a chimney dropped sparks there.

The flames spread first to the cupalo and then burst up in a grand column. It then burned downwards, consuming all that was combustible in the main building and now threatens to consume the whole eastern wing.

Water conveniences on the premises were quite insufficient. Streams were soon turned on but they were not heavy enough to overcome the flames.

Some 500 patients were in the buildings. Those nearest the fire were removed to a grove in the rear of the Asylum.

The loss cannot be less than $200,000

Dr L. F. Rose, was seriously if not fatally burned. He was engaged in fighting fire and removing property in the highest story when timbers fell and fastened him. Nearly all the surface of his body is burned to a crisp.

New York, July 14.

Col. Fremont is seriously ill, at the Brevoort House in this City. The steamship Arago arrived at midnight, with London dates July 1st. Has on nearly 200 passengers including Duncan McCrae, American Consul at Paris. Passed at anchor in Cowes roads Frigate Susquehanna and Ship Viking from Callao—Nothing additional of importance. A dispatch was received here to day from Cyrus W. Field, who went in the Berlin, on Wednesday. The despatch is dated from Cape Race and was sent to St. Johns by a Fisherman. The Berlin thus far had a fine run and her officers confidently expect to reach Liverpool as early as Friday.

The Riot in the 17th Ward lasted till midnight. The policemen were all obliged to keep themselves confined within the Station House for fear of violence, several of the force having been surpised and beaten by the mob The riot originated in the attempt of Coroner Terry to hold an inquest over the man shot in the riot on Sunday. The friends of the deceased objecting on account of the Coronor being an American or Know Nothing. Mr. Terry went among the excited people and made an appeal to them to keep the peace and promising it should be conducted fairly. The rioters heard him respectfully but refused to allow the policemen to walk their beats about 11 o'clock—Commistoner Draper ordered a posse of 500 policemen, to appear where the riot ers were congregated: the police succeeded in performing their task without much difficulty; a slight collision took place and several persons were arrested with fire arms in their possession.

Gen. Hall had the 7th, 8th and 71st regiments under arms till midnight, when no further disturbance being apprehended, they were disbanded.

This morning the city is quiet. None were killed. Six policemen and about a dozen rioters are now under arrest, more or less hurt.

Mayor Wood was no were to be found during the progress of the riot.

At the inquest of Meyer, it was proven that he is the notorious burglar known as Jack Spratt, and that he was shot while in the act of committing a burgalry in Broadway.

NEW YORK July 13.

The riot going on this P. M. in the 17th ward, is of a very serious nature. A mob of 500 Irish and Germans attacked the Metropolitan Police with missiles and fire arms. The Police were driven back, as were a squad sent to their relief. An other detachment of 100 men were immediately sent to the scene of the conflict and a requisition was made for a detachment of military.

This riot it is said, was premeditated, but would not take place till night when it was intended to commence with an attack on the station house in that ward.

MONTREAL, July 13.

A riot occurred yesterday, in consequence of the display of an Orange flag. Crowds of people assembled in the vicinity of the flag, and several shots were fired at it. Several Orangemen were beaten severly.

New York, July 13.

The Empire City, with Havana dates to the 7th arrived at Quarantine this afternoon.

☞Our farmers are preparing to cut the heaviest crop of wheat ever known in this county; they will commence the 18th or 20th. Some complain of the weevil, in their late wheat, but it is too far advanced to receive serious damage from the fly.—We notice that Mr. Anderson is repairing the Old Red Mills, for a heavy grind this fall. Mr. Baylis is building a patent packer at the Globe Mills, which will enable him to turn off flour in style and on time. Strong & Drew and A. Anderson & Co., will be able to occupy their new brick stores in a few weeks. In fact, eve-business man, in our place are preparing for a busy time this fall. We shall clean up the old "machine" and keep track of things generally.

☞A Yankee correspondent of the Connecticut Times, thinking it not impossible that the Comet may be open to persuasion, addresses it thus in a recent letter;

"What's he got against us? What have we done that he should directly or indirectly, in his Wandering Jew style of perambulating, trespass on our premises, and frighten Mr. Buchanan's people out of their senses? Why can't he pitch into one of his own size—say north river steamboat, or lash his elongated fiery narrative against the seven wonders of the world and let us alone? Mr Comet what is the use of acting in this way? Go along about your business. We are not ready to go out, and if we were, we are not so absent minded as to forget to ask Gabriel to blow his horn. Irving's Life of Washington

ILLUSTRATED.

GREAT inducements for Clubs. Messers G. P. Putnam & Co., having now published the first volume of the Illustrated Edition of Irving's life of Washington being the complete life of Washington before the Revolution, are ready to furnish the same to subscribers free of postage on the receipt of $3,50. Single numbers sent post paid to any part of the Union on the receipt of 25 cts.

The following are the inducements offered to clubs desiring to subscribe to this magnificent and national publication. Any person remitting four subscriptions for the first volume comprising 14 numbers will be entitled to five complete sets delivered free of postage.—Clubs of six remitting $21 will be entitled to two extra copies of the volume or an extra copy of any other of Putnam & Co's., publications of equal value. Clubs of twelve remitting $42 will be entitled to four extra copies or an extra copy and a complete set of Addison's work, in six volumes; delivered free of postage. The same premiums will be given for a like number of subscriptions to the succeeding volumes. Each number of the Illustrated Washington will contain one, and every other number two first class steel Engravings or Maps. In addition to the Steel engravings, the work contains numerous wood engravings, illustrative of historical subjects.

CAUTION.—Persons subscribing for the Life of Washington should be particular to obtain the only work which must forever remain the standard authority. Irving's life of Washington bears the imprint of G. P. Putnam & Co., the only publishers of Irving's Works.

"Every American should put this work side by side with his Bible on his book shelf. Let your children read it, and learn by the example of the Great Washington, the lessons of patriotism, moral courage, perseverance under difficulties, which the history of his life afford. We know of no American work which we had rather own than this: it is worth a thousand of the trashy publications which the press are daily sending forth.—[Scientific American.

Lenawee County Farmer.

Tecumseh, Michigan, July, 1857.

The Weather and the Crops.

The weather seems at last to be settled warm and pleasant. Our farmers have commonded haying. Grass is very heavy and a large amount will be cut.

Wheat is looking finely, and will be ready for the reaper in ten or twelve days. We may safely predict a more than average crop. Fruit is abundant Strawberries, Currants, Cheries, Apples, Peaches and Pears are in full bearing. The corn is begining to recover from the cold backward Spring and bids fair to come up to the usual average after all. So also of rye and Potatoes.

With the prospect of fine weather for haying and harvest, our farmers have every reason for encouragement and gratitude.

We cut from the Detroit Tribune, a collation of extracts from its ex change in regard to the crops throughout the State. They indicate, should the weather be favorable, an unusually heavy harvest and a heavy surplus:

The only crop we saw was a field of rye within about two miles of Muskegan. It was in the ear and looked an even, though we should judge not a very heavy crop.—[Ottawa Clarion.

The crops did look "hard" this spring; but they look 'fine' now. The season has been 'just the thing.'—Wheat, corn oats, grass, fruit, &c., all promise a good yeild. There will be more agricultural productions raised in Michigan this harvest, everything included, than have been produced for many a year.—[Livingston Republican.

Since the innauguration of June, vegetation has taken a new start and is now making the 'tallest' kind of progress upward. Wheat never looked better, grass is unusually heavy, corn begins to assume a healthy appearance—everything grows. The country never was more beautiful than now with waving fields.—[Marshal Expounder.

The wheat crop is coming forward rapidly in Clinton county. Instead of the sickly appearance which it presented a few days since it now looks healthy and thriving; and we have no doubt that the crop will fall but little short of an average one. The prevailing cold weather, however is very unfavorable for corn.—[De Witt Republican.

Last week we had occasion to make a circuit of some fifty miles through St. Joseph Co., and we must say that St. Joseph Co., can boast of some of the finest farms in Southern Michigan The wheat crop looks well with but few exceptions; the corn also presents a fine appearance.—[Three Rivers Herald.

The wheat crop never gave better promise of an exurbant yeild than it does at present, and should the weather continue favorable, will be the best crop ever gathered in this section of the State. Corn and potatoes have come up good, and the warm weather of the last ten days brings them on to their usual state of forwardness at this season. Fruit never was better there will be an abundance and as yet it seems free from the worm.—[Jackson Patriot.

From all quarters of the State come up cheering accounts of the condition and prospects of wheat, rye, oats grass, &c., We are having rather too much rain, in this vicinity, but a few days of sunshine will remedy this and exhibit an unusually rapid growth of all the productions of our soil. Never, to our mind, did a season promise amore abundant yeild of of the necessaries of life than the present.—[Grand Rapids Eagle.

A splendid hay crop is already secured in this part of the country so far as growth is concerned; the grain corps are promising; Indian corn is backward but as yet there is no reason to apprehend an unfavorable result.—Fruit of all kinds is likely to be very abundant. There will be a few peaches, even, notwithstanding the peach trees have been injured by successive hard winters:—[Grand Rapis Enquirer.

Intelligence from every part of the county represent the crops as never looking better and more promising. It is predicted on all hands that this will be the more productive season that has long been known. Many pieces of wheat in this county have already headed out very finely. Farmers from the south of us have been up here engaging hands for the approaching harvest.—[Eaton Rep.

We have taken great pains to ascertain the prospects of the crops in this county. The farmers all concur that the prospects are very flattering. Wheat and grass look fine, and the wheather is very favorable for the spring crops in general. The present indicates an abundant harvest.—[Owosso Am.

Since this change in the atmosphere we notice a marked change also in vegetation, especially in corn, potatoes and garden vegetables. It is seldom that so rapid and vigorous a growth, is witnessed in northern latitudes, as has taken place in this neighood within the past week, Wheat and grass never looked better or more promising than at present. The prospect is good also that there will be a large yeild of fruit; apple trees are well set with young apples.—[Lapeer Rep.

Throughout this county we never have seen the wheat fields look better at this time of the year, and the fields in Kalamazoo Co., where we have visited, look equally as well. It is not generally known, but it is true, that Allegan county has better wheat lands than any other county in the State, while it is not behind in any other grain.—[Allegan Record.

From present appearances an abundant crop of fruit and cereals, will in due season grown the efforts and hopes of the husbandman. We relate not our own observations and conclusions alone, but from every part of the country, the deep dark shadow of scarcity, which some weeks since cast its shadow over the land, has been gloriously dispelled by the recent favorable change in the weather, and there is little if any doubt but that the coming harvest will be plentiful one.—Ionia Gazette.

During the past week a vast quantity of rain has fallen, and vegetation of every kind presents a most flourishing appearance. Wheat never looked better. From all part of the country we receive the most encouraging accounts in reference to this crop. and we have no hesitancy in saying that there will be more wheat raised in Western Michgan the present year than ever before. We are assured by the farming community that corn is growing finely, and promises well notwithstanding it was planted very late. Spring wheat, oats, &c, are coming rapidly forward. An abundance of apples will be raised this year. Never was there such a year for currants as this; the bushes are weighed down by their clustering loads, and thousands of bushels of this lucious fruit will be raised in Berrien county alone. There will also be more than an average of cherries and plums.—The present is an uncommonly favorable season for potatoes, and we are glad to learn that a greater quantity of land has been put into potatos than usual. One farmer near Sturgis planted 300 acres which should there be no more than a crop, would yield him 60,000 bushels.—[Niles Enquirer.

Since our last issue the weather has been anything but agreeable; with the exception of two or three days it has been cold enough for fires and overcoats. The crops a general thing however, look well, particularly wheat and rye. Corn has improved materially within the last ten days but it is still backward and unless the weather comes off warm with less cold rains, we fear the crop will not amount to much. Appearances indicate a wet season for haying and harvesting, but we hope for better weather and consequently a better feeling among the farmers. Potatoes look remarbly well the prospect is that they will be less than 12s a bushel next spring.—[Branch Co. Journal July 7.

AYER'S
CHERRY PECTORAL,
FOR THE RAPID CURE OF
Colds, Coughs, and Hoarseness.

HONESDALE, PA., Sept. 30th, 1855.

DR. J. C. AYER:—I do not hesitate to say the most remedy I have ever found for Coughs, Hoarseness, Influenza, and the concomitant symptoms of a Cold, in your CHERRY PECTORAL. The confidence in my practice and my family for the last ten years has shown it to possess superior virtues for the treatment of these complaints. ESEN RANDELL, M. D.

A. H. MUSTLEY, Esq., of Utica, N. Y., writes: "I have used your PECTORAL myself and in my family ever since you invented it, and believe it the best medicine for its purpose ever put out. With a test trial I should sooner pay twenty-five dollars for a bottle, than do without it, or take any other remedy."

Croup, Whooping Cough, Influenza.

BROTHER AYER:—I will cheerfully certify your PECTORAL is the best remedy we possess for the cure of Whooping Cough, Croup, and the worst diseases of children. We of your fraternity in the South appreciate your skill, and commend your medicine to our people.

HIRAM ONKLIN, M. D.

AMOS LEE, Esq., MONTERAY, Ia., writes, 3d Jan., 1856: "I had a bedious Influenza, which confined me in doors six weeks; took many medicines without relief, finally tried your PECTORAL by the advice of our clergyman. The first dose relieved the soreness in my throat and lungs; less than one half the bottle made me completely well. Your medicines are the cheapest as well as the best we can buy, and we esteem you, Doctor, and your remedies, as the poor man's friend."

Asthma or Phthisic, and Bronchitis.

WEST MANCHESTER, Pa., Feb. 4, 1856.

SIR: Your CHERRY PECTORAL is performing marvellous cures in this section. It has relieved several from alarming symptoms of consumption, and is now curing a man who has labored under an affection of the lungs for the last forty years.

HENRY L. PARKS, Merchant.

A. A. RAMSEY, M. D., ATHENS, MONROE CO., Iowa, writes, Sept. 6, 1855: "During my practice of many years I have found nothing equal to your CHERRY PECTORAL for giving ease and relief to consumptive patients, or curing such as are curable."

We might add volumes of evidence, but the most convincing proof of the virtues of this remedy is found in its effects upon trial.

Consumption.

Probably no one remedy does ever been known which cured so many and such dangerous cases as this. Some no human aid can reach; but even to those the CHERRY PECTORAL affords relief and comfort.

ATHENS HOUSE, New York City, March 5, 1856.

DOCTOR AYER, LOWELL: I feel it a duty and a pleasure to inform you what your CHERRY PECTORAL has done for my wife. She had been five months laboring under the dangerous symptoms of Consumption, from which no aid we could procure gave her much relief. She was steadily failing, until Dr. Strong, of this city, where we have come for advice, recommended a trial of your medicine. We bless his kindness, as we do your skill, for she has recovered from that day. She is not yet as strong as she used to be, but is free from her cough, and calls herself well.

Yours with gratitude and regard,

ORLANDO SHELBY, of SHELBYVILLE.

Consumptives, do not despair till you have tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It is made by one of the best medical chemists in the world, and its cures all around us bespeak the high merits of its virtues.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills.

THE Science of Chemistry and Medicine have been taxed their utmost to produce this best, most perfect purgative which is known to man. Innumerable proofs are shown that these Pills have virtues which surpass in excellence the ordinary medicines, and that they win official precedentedly upon the esteem of all men. They are safe and pleasant to take, but powerful to cure. Their penetrating properties stimulate the vital activities of the body, remove the obstructions of its organs, purify the blood, and expel disease. They purge out the foul humors which breed and grow distemper, stimulate sluggish or disordered organs into their natural action, and impart healthy tone with strength to the whole system. Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of every body, but also formidable and dangerous diseases that have baffled the best of human skill. While they produce powerful effects, they are at the same time, in diminished doses, the safest and best physic that can be employed for children. Being sugar-coated, they are pleasant to take; and being purely vegetable, are free from any risk of harm. Cures have been made which surpass belief were they not substantiated by men of such exalted position and character as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Many eminent clergymen and physicians have lent their names to certify to the public the reliability of my remedies, while others have sent me the assurance of their conviction that my Preparations contribute immensely to the relief of my afflicted, suffering fellow-men.

The Agent below named is pleased to furnish gratis my American Almanac, containing directions for their use and certificates of their cures, of the following complaints:—Costiveness, Bilious Complaints, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Heartburn, Headache arising from a foul Stomach, Nausea, Indigestion, Morbid Inaction of the Bowels and Pain arising therefrom, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, all Diseases of an and Cutaneous Eruptions which require an evacuant Medicine, Scrofula or King's Evil. They also, by purifying the blood and stimulating the system, cure many complaints which it would not be supposed they could reach, such as Deafness, Partial Blindness, Neuralgia and Nervous Irritability, Derangements of the Liver and Kidneys, Gout, and other kindred complaints arising from a low state of the body or obstruction of its functions.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with some other pill they make more profit on. Ask for AYER'S PILLS, and take nothing else. No other they can give you compares with this in its infinite value or curative powers. The sick want the best and there is for them and they should have it.

HOWARD ASSOCIATION
PHILADELPHIA.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

TO all persons afflicted with Sexual Disease such as SPERMATORRHŒA, SEMINAL WEAKNESS, IMPORTANCE, GONORHŒA GLEET, SYPHILIS, the Vice of ONANISM, or Self Abuse, &c., &c.,

The HOWARD ASSOCIATION in view of the awful destruction of human life, caused by Sexual diseases, and the deceptions practised upon the unfortunate victims of such diseases by Quacks, have directed their Consulting Surgeon, as a CHARITABLE ACT worthy of their name, to give MEDICAL ADVICE GRATIS, to all persons thus afflicted, who apply by letter, with a description of their condition, (age, occupation, habits of life, &c.,) and in cases of extreme poverty and suffering, to FURNISH MEDICINES FREE OF CHARGE.

The Howard Association is a benevolent Institution, established by special endowment, for the relief of the sick and distressed, afflicted with "Virulent and Epidemic Diseases." It has now a surplus of means, which the Director have voted to expend in advertising the above notice. It is needless to add that the Association commands the highest Medical skill of the age, and will furnish the most approved modern treatment.

Just Published, by the Association, a Report on Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, the vice of Onanism, Masturbation or Self Abuse, and other Diseases of the Sexual Organs, by the Consulting Surgeon, which will be sent by mail, (in a sealed envelop,) FREE OF CHARGE, on the receipt of Two Stamps for postage.

Address, Dr. GEO. R. CALHOUN, Consulting Surgeon, Howard Association, No. 2 South NINTH Street, Philadelphia, Pa. By order of the Directors.

Patent Medicines.

A Medicine that Never Debilitates.

DR. SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR,

OR LIVER REMEDY.

HAS ALL THE GOOD QUALITIES OF A Purgative medicine; answering the purposes of any Cathartic without the debilitating effects experienced from mos. purgatives. It acts slowly and gently, but surely, moving the bowels to carry off all the secreted matter, at the same time, stimulating the Liver to a proper performance of its functions.

The Invigorator cures the Sick Headache. Take one or two tea-spoonsful at each attack and it will soon disappear. For an overloaded stomache, or when food rises or sours, take the Invigorator after eating, and it will not prove disagreeable or oppressive. For Heartburn, Palpitation, or difficult breathing take a teaspoonful once or twice daily. For Loss of Appetite, Langu or Listlessness, the medicine is invaluable. It will restore the appetite and make the food digest well—Nightmare take a teaspoonful on retiring, and the demons of dream-land will all be fairies. After eating a heavy dinner, take a dose of Invigorator and it will relieve all oppression or fullness. The Invigorator is a Liver Remedy of unequalled virtue, acting directly on that organ, curing Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, Dysentery, Piles Worms, and all Female Obstructions, for which it has no equal.

We know there is nothing now before the American public, prepared with such skill by a scientific man, particularly for diseases of the Liver, as Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver Remedy. It has attained a reputation second to no other article in the world, simply because it rests on its own merit. To convince all by trial that it is all its proprietors claim it to be, if any of our readers are suffering from such diseases as are described in Dr Sanford's advertisement, we know of no remedy that will so surely cure as the Invigorator.

There has lately been brought to our notice a medicine that seems to possess wonderful, curative and healing properties in diseases of the Liver, stomsohe and Digestive Organs. It came to us with so many testimonials in its favor that we have noted its effects in some of the worst cases of continual debility, caused by deranged liver, and in every instance the effect was to relieve or give a permanent cure. Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver remedy is what we refer to. We always have been credulous about cures by patent medicines, but we are convinced that this medicine, for family use, is not over rated by the host of recommendations it has. Our advice is, for all troubled with Indigestion, Debility or Bowel Complaint, to get a bottle and try it; our word for it, relief will be experienced.

BLESSINGS To The Invalids who use Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, for it will relieve them of their pains as soon as it is taken into their stomach. Pain and misery cannot exist where the Invigorator is used, for it will as surely drive them away as daylight will banish darkness, of this there can be no doubt to those who try it, for it carries conviction with every dose taken. Another evidence is the thousands of certificates from those who use it or have been cured by it.—Try one bottle, if it does not benefit, then we are mistaken.

CHOOSE BETWEEN THEM.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

The blood furnishes the material of every tissue muscle gland and fibre in the human frame. When pure it secures health to every organ; when corrupt it necessarily produces disease. Holloway's Pills operate directly upon the elements of the stream of life, neutralizing the principle of disease and thus radically curing the malady, whether located in the nerves, the stomach, the liver, the bowels, the muscles the skin, the brain, or any other part of the system.

USED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

Holloway's Pills are equally efficacious in complaints common to the whole human race, and in disorders peculiar to certain climates and localities.

ALARMING DISORDERS.

Dyspepsia and derangement of the liver, the source of infirmity and suffering. And the cure of numberless other disorders, in all cases how ever aggravated setting aside purgative, alterative and tonic; they relieve, purify, the fluids and invigorate the system and the constitution at the same time.

General Weakness—Nervous Complaints.

When all stimulants fail, the renovating and bracing properties of these Pills give firmness to the shaking nerves and enfeebled muscles of the victim of general debility.

DELICATE FEMALES.

All irregularities and ailments incident to the delicate and sensitive organs of the sex are removed or prevented by a few doses of these mild but infallible alterratives. No mother who regards her own or her children's health should fail to have them within her reach.

The London Lancet" the London Medical Review" and the most eminent of the faculty in Great Britain France and Germany, have eulogized the Pills and their inventor.

Dreams.

Oh! there is a vision of early youth,
And it never comes again;
'Tis a vision of light, of life and truth,
That flits across the brain;
And love is the theme of that early dream,
So wild, so warm, so new,
That in all our after years I deem,
Our early dreams we rue,

Oh! there is a dream of maturer years,
More turbulent by far;
'Tis a vision of blood, and of woman's tears,
For the theme of that dream is war;
And we toil in the field of danger and death,
And shout in the battle array,
Till we find that Fame is a bodiless breath,
That vanisheth away.

Oh! there is a dream of hoary age,
'Tis a vision of gold in store;
Of sums noted down in a figured page,
To be counted o'er and o'er;
And we fondly trust in our glittering dust,
As a refuge from grief and pain,
Till our limbs are laid on that dark bed,
Where the wealth of the world is vain.

And is it thus, from man's birth to his grave,
In the path which all are treading?
Is there naught in that long career to save
From remorse and self-upbraiding?
O yes, there's a dream so pure, so bright,
That the being to whom it is given,
Hath bathed in a sea of living light;
And the theme of that dream is HEAVEN

The Sabbath.

Sidney Smith pronounced the following sonnt one of the most beautiful in the English language;

With silent awe, I hail the sacred morn
Which slowly wakes, while all the fields are still;
A soothing calm on every breeze is borne—
A graver murmur gurgles from the rill,
And echo answers softer from the hill,
And softer sings the linnet from the thorn—
The skylark warbles in a tone less shrill.
Hail! light serene; hail! sacred Sabbath morn;
The rooks float silent by, in airy droves;
The sun a placid yellow luster shows;
The gales that lately sighed along the groves,
Have hushed their downy wings in sweet repose;
The hovering rack of clouds forgets to move;
So smiled the day when the first morn arose.

A Hymn for Spring.

The earth is silent with delight
Beneath the kisses of the West,
The sky a single crysolite,
Sheds odor from its breast.
Sweet music through the merry woods
Heralds the coming of the leaves,
And beauty on the water broods
Binding its golden sheaves.
This beauty, is thy breath O Lord!
Which makes the meadows fresh and fair,
And summer fragrance, half restored,
Blends with the balmy air
Thy glances brighten all the heavens
And stills the wonder haunted sea—
By thee, is vernal glory given
Our hearts shall worship thee!

Wit at a Pinch.

A country girl one morning went
To market with a pig,
The little curl tail, not content,
Began to squeal a jig.
A dandy, who was riding by,
Who wished to pass a joke—
'My dear, how comes your child to cry,
When wrapped up in your cloak!'
The country girl thus quickly replies—
'So had a breeding had he,
That, ever and anon he cries,
When'er he sees his daddy.'

Westward Ho.

An ague-stricken hypochondriac, who has been on a trip out that way, thus answers some questions in a letter to the Saturday Evening Post—

The first question comes from Cambridgeport, Mass., and reads as follows: "Which is the best time for going West, the Spring or Autumn?"

The best time for going West is when ou have the most money about you, and he least fear of loosing it. If you come n the Spring, you are sure to shake ourself to death with the ague before Fall. If you come in the Fall, you may ive until Spring, if you don't freeze to leath before you get there. If you come t all, you had better get your stomach ined with water-proof cement, so as to be able to digest corn bread, beacon and whiskey; for this is all we have to eat, except a few French hogs, and bilious looking tadpoles, which we catch when the river runs down.

Second question—"What part of the West is the best to emigrate to, taking in consideration the healthfulness of climate?"

A variety of opinions about that, my dear fellow. Our Senator, Mr Douglas, says Kansas is the best. So it is if you want to go into the stock business, raising an unruly kind of mixed colored cattle, that will stray off to Canada, in spite of the Compromise of 1820 or 1856, or Senator Douglas. Or, if you want to speculate in papooses, white scalps, and get your own scalp taken off scientifically, go to Nebraska by all means. If you want to play poker for a living, and set up whisky drinking for a business, to live on corn bread and bacon week days, and slipery elm bark on sundays, come to Illinois.

If you want to go where they have no Sundays nor anything to eat, only what they brought from the east, go to Iowa; or if you want to go to grass on all foure, and do as other kinds of cattle do, go to Salt Lake.

If you want to go where they receive the mail annually, where they live on wild cranberri, s crumbled in water from the Mississippi river, where three wig wams make a city and a paper of pins and a bar of Yankee soap, a merchant—go to Minnesota,

Third question.—"Does the fever and ague prevail much in Wisconsin?"

Of course it does. Nobody out West is fool enough to ask such a question.—Everybody shakes; even the trees shake; you can't coax a crab apple to stay on when it is good for anything; it will shake a man out of his bed, kick him out of doors, and shake the beadstead at him till he gives up.

Fourth question.—"How long does a pre-emption hold good?"

That depends on circumstances. If you have a good rifle, and know how to use it, you have a chance to ten that you may live until you starve to death. But if you can't stand fire, and are not a good shot and a quick one, take my word for it, you had better tarry in Jericho until your beard be grown; they are all too smart for you in these woods.

Fifth question.—"Is the land to be had in the northwest part of Ohio $1,25 per acre, and is it good?"

That's all fudge, got up by speculators to gull some greenhorn like you and me, for to the best of my knowledge or belief, Ohio was worn out ten years ago. The whole business of the rrilroads in warm weather, is to carry back persons who have been fools enough to come west. All the railroads are doing this winter is carrying dirt into Ohio out of Michigan to raise a few beans and oats, to keep the folks from starving to death next summer.

As to the land in the northwest of Ohio, is eighteen inches under water most of the year, and will probably be worth $1,25 per acre, when water snakes and copper heads bring as much per barrel in New York markets as potatoes are worth per bushel in Alton.

And lastly, he wants reliable information—a short article in your paper relating to the subject—and he wants to go to a healthy location, decent land and fair water.

Exactly! Why my dear sir, there is no such thing as reliable information out West, unless you pay well for it. A lawyer wont tell you without you pay him $500, a witness can't tell the truth in court unless you first scare him to death and make him swear he won't lie, and then neither himself nor anybody else knows whether he tells the truth or not.

On the whole, if you feel obliged by our "short article," so do I. If you want to go to a healthy land, stay at home, and don't be a fool like myself and come out west. And as for decent land, my dear fellow, what do you mean? You must know that our wild prairie is very indecent, especially when it is burnt over and left as naked as when it was born,—'Tis true, nature weaves a sort of fig leaf apron every summer, out of a coarse kind of grass, but it soon gets burt off, and is as indecent as ever.

As for fair water, we have none, it is all a bilious compost of liquid mud, dead buffaloes, fish and rotten rattle-snakes.

Our common drink, when we can't get whiskey is one-third coffee, one-third prairie mud, and one-third tobacco juice.

Upon the whole, if you have good water, and can get half enough to eat stay where you are. Yours truly, W.

BE KIND TO YOUR SISTERS.—Boys be kind to your sisters. You may live to be old, and never find such tender, loving friends as these sisters. Think how many things they do for you; how patient they are with you; how they love you in spite of all your ill temper or rudeness; how thoughtful they are for your comfort, and be you thoughtful for theirs. Be ever ready to oblidge them to perform any little office for them that lies in your power. Think what you can do for them and if they express a wish, be ready to gratify it if possible. You do not know how much happiness you will find in so doing. I never knew a happy and respected man who was not in youth kind to his sisters. There is a beautiful song which says:

Be kind to your sisters—not many may know
The depth of true sisterly love;
The wealth of the ocean lies fathoms below
The surface that sparkles above.

The weakest spot in any man is where he thinks himself the wisest, and the brightest spot where he confesses that the more he learns the more he feels his own ignorance!—How many of this latter class?

How Vidocq was Superceded.

At the time of the robbery of the medals of the Royal Library, the great thief-taker, Vidocq, was Chief of Police, but failed to discover the robbers, who were, however, successfully arrested by Lacour under the following circumstances:

M Gisquet applied to Lacour to discover the perpetrators of the deed. He refused at first. "You have," said he, "your Chief Police, M. Vidocq; let him find the robbers." But Gisquet insisted, and Lacour yielded.

Some days after, Lacour, who had got upon the track of rascals, sought Gisquet, and told him that three men had committed the robbery—Froussard, and two others, whose names we have forgotten.

"Who?" asked Gisquet.

"First," was the reply, "in order to steal the medals, thieves must know something of their value; this indicates that the criminals were thus learned. This reduces to fifteen persons among whom we are to seek the robbers of the library.—The skill with which the furniture was opened further limits the number; and finally the extreme elegance of tools left where the crime was committed, convinces me beyond doubt that Froussard is the leading spirit in the crime."

"Then seek him," said Gisquet.

To seek him was easy to find him was more difficult. Froussard, more than twenty times condemned to the galleys, had always managed to elude justice.—But one day Lacour paused upon the bridge De Turnelle, seeing before him two persons dressed with elegance and taste. There was nothing about them tawdry or mysterous—nothing calculated to attract attention. Suddenly Lacour, who had not seen their faces, said to himself: "I have it! Here are two companions of the chain. In spite of the elegance of these two gentlemen, I recognize a trait not generally perceptible. A certain movement of the limb, which the convict contracts from wearing the fetters, betrays them. One of these wore the chain upon the left, and the other upon the right leg."

Lacour advanced, and notwitstanding his disguise, recognized Froussard as one of the men before him. He hastened to the nearest post, and begged the officer to arrest the two men. "One of them," said he, is Froussard, the author of the Library robbery." The officer in common with the military, having a decided repugnance, for policemen refused to make the arrest, unless Lacour would produce a written order and give the signals.

Lacour was distracted. He could not make himself known; the robbers would escape. Suddenly he saw a magistrate on the quay. He hastened to him and stated the cirmstances. "I pledge my word," said he, "that M Gisquet has charged me with the detection of the robbers; trust to me, arrest these men, and you will secure a reward." The magistrate was convinced, and gave him a blank warrant which he filled out: the commandant was satisfied, and gave orders for the arrest. Instantly Lacour at the head of some soldiers, seized Froussard by the arms and held him, for otherwise he would have drawn his knife and fought to the last. As it was, Froussard attempted to seize his weapon, but he was overpowered. He exclaimed upon seeing himself secured: "What! arrested with a disguise so perfect! Lacour must be at he bottom of this; I just saw him, added he going to the post."

Vidocq ceased to be Chief of Police soon after this success of his rival.

Seasonable Caution.

It was down in Ohio, they say that the people as they passed along a certain road saw over in the lot an old man of seventy years planting corn. The season was cold and backward, the ground was wet and the rains seemed melted snow.

"Hello Granther!" says one wiser than the rest, 'don t you know better than to plant corn in that mud? Youre' throwing away your labor. It'll all rot in the ground.'

"When its time to plant, I plant"—and spat! went the old patriarchs hoe down on the last corn hill. 'The Almighty and I have worked this farm on shares for the last twenty five years and we've made a paying business of it too. I do the planting, and he does the growing. When its time to plant, I plant, and if the seed rots in the ground that's his lookout. We never intefere with each other's business.'

Most men employ their first years so as to make their last miserable, and there need be no wonder about it. Cause—false education. Fact.

The Turnpike Boy and the Banker.

It was during a panic in England, some years since, that a gentleman, by the name of Thompson, was seated with something of a melancholly look, in his dreary back room, watching his clerk pay away thousands of pounds hourly. He was an excellent banker of excellent credit; there existed, perhaps, in the city of London, no safer concern than that of Messrs. Thompson & Co., but at a moment such as I speak of, no rational reflection was admitted, no former stability was looked to; a general distrust was felt, and every one rushed to his banker's to withdraw his hoard, fearful that the next instant would be to late, forgetting that this step, of all others, was the most likely to insure the ruin he sought to avoid.

But to return. The wealthy citizen sat gloomily watching the outpouring of his gold, and with a grim smile listening to the clamorous demands on his cashier, for although he felt perfectly easy and secure as to the ultimate result of his resources, yet he could not repress a feeling of bitterness, as he saw constituent after constituent rush in, and those whom he always fondly imagined to be his dearest friends, eagerly assisting in the run upon his strong box.

Presently the door was opened and a stranger was ushered in, who, after gazing for a moment at the bewildered banker, coolly drew a chair and abruptly addressed him:

"You will pardon me, sir, for asking rather a strange question, but I am a plain man, and like to come to the point."

"Well sir?" impatiently interrupting the other.

"I have heard that you had a run on your bank, sir."

"Well?"

"It is true?"

"Really, sir, I must decline replying to your very extraordinary query. If, however, you have any money in the bank, you had better at once draw it out, and so satisfy yourself; 'our cashier will instantly pay you,' and the banker rose as a hint for the stranger to withdraw.

"Far from it, sir; I have not a sixpence in your hands."

"Then, may I ask you, what is your business here?"

"I wish to know if a small sum would aid you this moment?"

"Why do you ask that question?"

"Because if it would, I should gladly pay in a small deposit."

The money-dealer started.

"You seem surprised; you don't know my person or my motive. I'll at once explain. Do you recollect some twenty years ago, when you resided in Essex?"

"Perfectly."

"Well then, sir, perhaps you have not forgotten the turnpike gate through which you passed daily. My father kept that gate, and was very often honored with a few minutes chat with you. One Christmas morning my father was taken sick, and I attended to toll bar. On that day you passed through, and I opened the gate. Do you recollect it, sir?"

"Not I my friend."

"No, sir, few such men remember their kind deeds but those benefited by them seldom forget them. I am, perhaps, prolix; listen, however, only a few moments, and I have done."

The banker, who began to feel interested, at once assented.

"Well, sir, as I said before, I threw open the gate for you, and as I considered myself in duty bound, I wished you a happy Christmas. 'Thank you, my lad,' replied you; 'thank you, and the same to you; here is a trifle to make it so;' and you threw me a seven-shilling piece. It was the first money I ever possessed, and never shall I forget my joy on receiving it, or your kind smile when bestowing it. I long treasured it, till I was able to rent a toll myself. You soon after left that part of the country, and lost sight of you. Yearly, however, I have been gaining on, your present brought good fortune with it; I am now comparatively rich, and to you I consider I owe all.—So this morning, hearing accidentally that there was a run on your bank, I drew my deposits from my banker, and have brought them to lodge with you, in case they can be of any use; so here they are sir—here they are; and he handed a bundle of bank-notes to the agitated Thompson.—In a few days I'll call again;" and snatching up his hat, the stranger throwing down his card, immediately walked out of the room.

Thompson opened the roll; it contained £30,000! The stern-hearted banker burst into tears. The firm did not require this prop; but the motive was so noble, that even a millionaire was affected—he could not help it. The firm is still one of the first in the city of London.

Speak Kindly to thy Mother.

Young man, speak kindly to your mother, and courteously, tenderly, of her. But a little time and you shall see her no more forever. Her eye is dim, and her form is bent, and her shadow falls toward the grave. Others may love you fondly; but never again while time is yours, shall any one's love be to you as that of your old, trembling, weakened mother has been.

Through helpless infancy her throbbing breast was your safe protection and support; in wayward, testy, boyhood, she bore patiently with your thoughtless rudeness; she nurished you safely through a legion of ills and maladie.

Her hand bathed your burning brow, or moistened your parched lips; her eye lighted up the darkness of nightly vigils, watching sleepless by your side as none but her could watch. Oh speak not her name lightly, for you cannot live so many years as would suffice to thank her fully. Though reckless and impatient youth, she is your counsellor and solace. To a bright manhood she guides your steps for improvement; nor even then forsaken or forgot.

Speak gently then, and revently, of your mother; and when you too shall be old it shall in some degree lighten the remorse which shall be yours for other sins, to know that never wantonly have you outraged the respect due to your aged mother.

How to Stop Table-Turning.

In the course of its travels, table-turning reached Munich, the capital of Bavaria. Liebig had but recently been established there, as Professor of Chemistry, the enlightened government of that kingdom having drawn him thither from Giessen. The experiment of table-turning succeeded, marvellously at first. Good and intelligent people were amazed at the phenomenon, and fully believed, either that spiritual forces were at work in the mahogany, or that some new physical power was unfolding itself. They naturally went to the great philosopher, to obtain his opinion. He simply said, "Place your hands under the table, and not on it, they did so, and no table however light, though running on castors over polished floors under the smallest impulsion, would yet budge an inch—or a hair's breadth. The good people of Munich were again astonished at the facility with which they had deceived themselves, thanked Liebig for opening their eyes; for it is not the custom there to consult men of science on obscure subjects and then abuse them if their opinions do not happen to coincide with the popular madness of the hour—and table-turning has never troubled Munich since. The explanation of course was, that when their hands were on the table, they pushed it unconsciously; when their hands were under the table, they could not push it without a conscious effort, inasmuch as the force of gravitation was against them. And as they were honest people they would not push, and as the table was an honest table, it would not go.—Boston Courier.

A FIRST RATE GUN.—A farmer told a friend of his who had come to town for a few days' shooting, that he once had so excellent a gun that it went off immediately upon a thief coming into the house, although not charged.

"Wonderful gun, indeed," said the sportsman, but how the duce did it happen?—must have been an Irish gun."

"Not at all," said the farmer, "the thief and it went off together, and before I had time to charge him with it!" A regular sell.

HE DRINKS.—How ominous that sentence falls! How we pause in conversation and ejaculate—"It's a pity!" How his mother hopes he will, not when he gets older; and his sisters persuade themselves that it is only a few wild oats that he is sowing. And yet the old men shake their heads and feel gloomy when they think of it. Young men just commencing in life, buoyant with hopes, don't drink. You are freighted with a precious cargo. The hopes of your parents, of your sisters, of your wives, of your children—all are laid down upon you. In you the aged live over their young days; through you only can the weary one obtain a position in society and from the level on which you place them, must your children go into the great struggle of life.

The trials of life are the tests which ascertain how much gold there is in us.

A bitter jest is the poison of friendship.

Evening.

The sun hangs low o'er yonder forest wide,
Flows on the hills, and lightens on the plain,
Now calmly sinks beyond the heaving tide,
And leaves the twilight to contend in vain.

The mighty wonders of the evening sublime,
Riding in the form of the morning grey,
And heaven's own fires, during the long time,
Illumes the chambers of eternal day.

The western skies no longer glow with red,
Its e ening rays, departing day declare,
So as the south go down the noble dead,
And s mory only points in silence there.

With soft and silent steps, the shades of night,
By slow degrees steal o'er the dewey ground,
Skies, hills, and plains, dissolving with the light,
Till on the vision fades the landscape round.

The thrush that oft in yon der sylvan bower,
Broke on the stillness of the noonday heat,
Has ceased to warble in this solemn hour,
The strains melodious of her song so sweet.

No more is heard the boatman's whistle shrill,
As low he bends to break the sullen tide,
Nor soon the ploughman trudging o'er the hill,
Slow wending homeward to his own fireside.

Now all is still, save from the distant lake,
Strikes on the ear a deep and dreary roar,
The sullen waves on trembling barriers break,
And in deep murmurs die along the shore.

Above, beneath, how far, how wide around,
All nature's lulled to soft and deep repose,
Not e'en a zephyr steels along the ground,
But sinks to slumber on a neighboring rose.

Ah; like the zephyr, if I could but fly,
"To some lone isle, where spring eternal blends,
There would I live, and there unknown would die,
Nor ask one solace of the world's fair friends.

When nature's last throes rend my inmost breast
And rack my frame with mortal agony,
I'd close my eyes in one deep sea of rest,
And tread the skies in immortality. A. W.

OVERCHARGING—AGGRAVATED CASE. We learn the particulars of an aggravated case of overchaging assault, robbery, &c., which is a little ahead of anything in this line we had an opportunity of recording for a considerable time. A man named Van Antwerp, who resides at Gross se Pointe, was in the city Friday evening and being at Carters Saloon, got into a hack and ordered the driver to drive him to Tom Gallagher's. Instead of going to Gallaghers, he was driven to a saloon in the 'infected district,' just above the Detroit and Milwaukee Railway. Upon alighting Van Antwerp said to the driver "this is not Tom Galagher's!" The driver answered that 'it was a good place to get something to drink, and he could afterwards drive to Tom's.' They both went into the saloon, where were two or three others, and after Van Antwerp had treated the crowd, the driver demanded the payment of $6 for cab hire Van Antwerp refused, saying that he had not driven him where he was ordered, and when he did so he was ready to pay him. One of the crowd stepped up, saying, he was the owner of the hack and that the bill was right and Van Antwerp must pay it before he left the house. (This man's we believe is Williamson.) Van Antwerp still refused, and the consequence was a fight in which Van Antwerp held his own against the crowd, but got some bruises about the head; He finally compromised the matter by paying $2 and treating the crowd a second time: after which he again started for Tom Gallaghers. This time they brought up at the Buffalo saloon a notorious house on Beaubian st., kept by Jim Ramsey. They went in here, and Van Antwerp finding that he was likely to get into another fight dodged out of the back door. On gaining the side walk he met a partial acquaintance to whom he told some of the above circumstances. This man asked him to go to the Railraad Hotel and stay with him to which he assented. They roomed together, and on getting up Saturday morning, Van Antwerp found that his wallet containing some $18 in bills and a note of $100, was gone. On Saturday Van. saw the hackman Joseph Duby, mentioned in another item as being under arrest for over charging, and immediately identified him as one of the parties who were with him in the saloon where the dispute and fight occurred.—Probably the chap who drove the hack.—We believe that Williamson has also been arrested. Search was made for the chap who is supposed so have stolen the money and note, but he could not be found.—Det. Adv.

TO MAKE WATER COLD WITHOUT ICE.—The following is a simple method of rendering water almost as cold as ice:—Let the jar, pitcher, or vessel used for water be surrounded with one or more folds of course cotton, to be constantly wet. The evaporation of the water will carry off the heat from the inside and reduce it to a freezing point. In India, and other tropical climes, where ice cannot be procured this is common. Let every mechanic and laborer have at his home or place of employment two pitchers thus provided, and with lids or covers, one to contain fresh water for drinking, the other for evaporation, and he can always have a supply of cold water in warm weather.

A gentleman who has a very strong desire to be a funny man, sat down upon a hooped skirt the other day. With a desperation equal to any emergency, he whistled "I'm sitting on the style Mary."

Destructive Hail Storm.

Great Destruction of Property.

Our village and its vicinity were on Friday last visited with one of the severest storms of Hail, wind and rain that has been known here from the first settlement of the country.

It commenced about four o'clock in the afternoon and although it did not last half an hour, it has damaged our citizens and farmers to the extent of many thousand dollars. The direction of the storm was N E and S W coming from the N E. Its path was not more than three miles in width, with the village of Tecumseh nearly in its centre. The outer edges, of its line suffered more severely than the centre. Immense ammounts of glass were broken out by the hail storms, which were of enormous size.

A. D. Hall Esq. who resides just north of the village had about 200 pains broken in his dwelling R. C. Moore Esq. had all the chimnies blown from his brick cottage. The gable end of the new brick School House just west of the village was blown in. The tin roof was blown from a portion of the Bidwell Block, in which our office is situated, drenching our entire establishment from the roof to the cellar with water.

The whole length of Chicago st, was strewn with the relics of the shade trees along its borders. They were mostly the Locust however, which are becoming so so much ravaged by the borer that, they would scarcely have survived another season without this. A large oak tree upon Pottawattomie street standing just in front of the residence of Horace Brewer Esq. was a good deal shattered and one or two large limbs, sent endwise through the side of the house into his parlor. One building in the process of erection on the east side of the village was removed bodily from its foundation Poultry were killed by the hail storm and cattle by the falling trees and limbs—but we do not learn that any human lives were lost.

The loss however was much more severe amongst the farmers. On the north edge of the tornado—Simeon Davidson and Daniel Waring extensive farmers, had their entire wheat crop, which was just ready for the reaper, so beaten to pieces, as to be scarcely worth harvesting. Their neighbors in that vicinity fared no better. Oats and Barley were likewise about destroyed and corn very much injured.—On the south edge, being along the centre Raisin it was still worse. The hail was so severe as to draw blood profusely upon flocks of sheep exposed, and the crops of wheat and other crops were so much cut to pieces, many of them, that the farmers have abandoned all idea of harvesting them. S. R. Hayward, Buttler Holloway, Thos. J. Faxion, John Cox, Geo. Smith and their immediate neighbors, are spoken of as having been particularly affected by the calamity.

On Sunday night there was another severe storm while is said to have been as destructive ten or twelve miles north east of this as the one of Friday was to us.

Godey's Lady's Book.

The August No. of Godey is received Its colored fashion plates, colored and other work patterns, plates of instruction in painting on glass and drawing, are all not only beautiful, but valuable and interesting. Among its articles, which are always written with spirit and talent, we notice "False Pride" by Georgiana H. S Hall. The Frugal "Housewife" by Alice B. Neal. "Lost Diamonds" by Mr. Crow and "Isabella Stewart" by Pauline Forsyth. Address L. A Godey, Philadelphia. Terms $3, per annum; 2 copies $5, three copies $6.

Putnam's Monthly.

The August No of Putnam is promptly received and always welcome. It contains, a fine illustrated article, entitled, "Lake George"—Shamyl and his Harem, Alendelssohn and his music—Noses—A Tale of Florence—Witching Times, continued, &c. The No is a good one, even for Putnam, and that is saying a good deal in its praise Published by Miller & Curtis, 321 Broadway N. Y.—Terms $3, per annum.

Four unmistakable signs of a bad heart,—1. To live only for ourselves. 2. To take pleasure in the misfortunes of others. 3. To have no heart for gratitude when in prosperity 4. To say to our neighbor "stand out of my way—I'm holier than thou." No one need put the above cap on unless it fits

In Waterloo Canada West while an artillery company were firing a salute on the evening of the third instant, the cannon exploded prematurely, terribly lacerating the two men engaged in loading it, and killing by a splinter from the ramrod a young man standing upon the steps of a public house a hundred yards distant. Of course further festivities ceased.

Three Men Executed at St. Louis.

The St. Louis Republican of Saturday, contains an account of the execution of Shultz, LaPointe and Neuslein, in that city on the day previous. From its details we select the following:

IN THE MORNING.

At early morning, as we understand, for by joint request, visitors were denied their presence, they arose and dressed themselves, and devoted their few remaining hours to holy exercises. The Holy Communion of the Last Supper was vouchsafed to them, and with apparent patience they awaited the dread summons.

From this time till their last meal of coffee and cake was served them, at a few minutes after one, they devoted to the service of their Maker the few minutes of time allotted them. Meantime the preparations in the jail-yard were completed. The jail gate, delivered to the custody of the County Marshal, he admitted none but those whose duty it was to be present, either ex-officio or by reason of their invitation to become the legal witnessess of the occassion. When we arrived, Mrs. LaPointe, the mother of John, was kneeling in the humility of desperation upon the stone steps of the jail door. To all appearance unmindful of the presence of strangers, she knelt and prayed, her very bosom heaving with convulsive agony, her face betokening the anxiety of fear and suspense. On every side tears fell from stout hearted men as they thought of her sorrow. She was subsequently induced to leave the spot so fatal to her happiness and peace.

Apparelled in deep mourning, her grey hair, her woe, deep seated upon her countenance, spoke of the agony which a mother alone could feel. The gallows gave much fear to the few bystanders; expressions of fear lest some unavoidable accident should prolong the suffering of the doomed men, were frequent. This man urged the catch was wrong, the hinges out of place, the trap too small—indeed every sort of objection was canvassed. How it all turned out as best prompted by humanity the sequel showed On the scaffolding were placed three chairs, facing the rear of the Recorder's Court; in the front of them was a form, while in their rear hung the ropes from which these men were to swing.

Outside the jail-yard were assembled about 1500 persons, amongst whom might have been scattered about fifty women.—They were generally peaceable, but once or twice during the morning, as they grew impatient to hear that all was over, a slight confusion was perceptible. To their credit, however, be it said, there was no hooting or drunkenness. True many sought by clambering on the tops of carriages to obtain a view of the melancholy scene, but thanks to a proper disposition of the police and the choice selection of the gallows ground, their morbid curiosity was not to any extent gratified.

THE PRISONERS ON THE SCAFFOLD.

At 2:13 P. M. the jail door creaked upon its hinges, a passage way was cleared in silence, and as the messengers of death commenced to descend from the prison-house, every hat was raised, and every voice was hushed.

La Pointe was first led out. He was supported by a priest whose name we could not learn. Dressed in a light suit of black, his face close, he walked with a firm footing to the gallows. He looked neither to the right nor left only seeming to fear that he might see some acquaintance, relative or friend to part with, which was worse than the death he was so boldly facing. He breathed rather than spoke responses to the prayers addressed to him by the minister.

Shultz, accompanied but not led by Father Paris, followed next. He was habited in a suit of light colored clothes, around his left arm being tied a piece of black crape. By appearance he would have been supposed to be a friend attending the last sad services of La Pointe.—He walked unmoved, and looked at the gallows without the quiver of a muscle. He ascended the steps with a step, almost light.

Last of all came Neuslein. His face pale, his long beard and longer hair shaking in his mental excitement. His face completely blanched, he looked the most as if he stood upon the grave he had prematurely dug for himself. Father Pulaski supported his slow steps, but there was no faltering, and he moved forward evidently highly excited, but as evidently resolved to die a fearless death.

THE END.

At six minutes to three everything was in readiness. Neuslein was praying aloud, while the others seemed to us to be engaged in similar occupation, but in a lower tone. The former, as he repeated his dying prayers devoutly, and at frequent intervals, kissed the the image of the Saviour upon the crucifix he held.—They kissed the ropes that were so soon to deprive them of earthly existence.—Their seats were removed, they bade farewell to the Marshal and his assistants, and those on the fall, and they were placed upon boxes, laid one for each upon the trap. The props supporting the fall were removed, the white caps drawn over their faces, the ropes adjusted, and three minutes past three the trap fell, and their souls took flight to the unknown regions.

Shoultz died without a movement or the quiver of a muscle. He dropped down and died with a six foot fall.—Neuslein, with his neck broken, fell some five feet; for a second there was a convulsive struggling of the limbs, followed by agonized pulsation, a quiver, and all was over. He was dead in five minutes. La Pointe, so vigorous and strong, died easy, yet not so easy as did the others.

There was a convulsion for three minutes after Neuslein had departed, but the movement was weak, and one that did not show pain, however painful it was to look upon. Once or twice his lower limbs were drawn up towards the upper, and then with a few swings and shakes he passed from earth.

At a quarter past three they were declared to have been "hung by the neck until they were dead," cut down, placed in plain mahogany coffins, on the top of each of which was a silver crucifix, and delivered to the custody of their friends. La Pointe and Neuslien being taken in one hearse, in charge of the clergy, and Shoultz being delivered into the custody of his family.

Another Murder.

The news of another murder committed in this vicinity, was rife on our streets, this morning. The scene of this murder is in the neighborhood of Manhattan, and both the parties concerned are, we believe, Frenchmen The facts in the case as nearly as we can ascertain them, are as follows: On Saturday evening there was a party or dance at the house of an old Frenchman, about five miles back of Manhattan. Among those in attendance were the parties concerned in this case, two Frenchmen, their names Jubel and Bordeau. In some of the plays or games in the course of the evening, Jubel kissed Bordeau's wife. Thereat Bordeau became exceedingly angry, and said that "this should be the last time he ever kissed her," or something to that effect. Whether any further outbreak occurred on that evening, we are not advised, but it appears that about 1 oclock this morning, as we hear it, Jubel was shot down as he was entering his house, by some one lying in ambush for him. On being shot Jubel exclaimed, "O God, I am killed," and soon after expired. Bordeau has been arrested on the charge of killing him, and will have an examination as soon as the Coroner's Jury shall have rendered a verdict.—Toledo Blade.

Railroads in Egypt.

A correspondent of the N. York Journal of Commerce, writing from Cairo, and describing the railroad from Alexandria to the Red Sea, says:

A peculiarity is seen in the construction of this railroad. I observed no sleepers except near the depot, instead of which as the country could not furnish the timber, a strong hollow iron apparatus is cast, much resembling the common culinary iron pot, which is firmly fastened in the earth by sinking the open end, while the rails rest upon notches cast in the exterior of the other end. These with small iron bars crossing the track, keep the rails fast. The railroad is 130 miles long, and is being extended to Suez, on the Red Sea, all of which distance is completed, except forty miles next to Suez, and will be opened the entire distance within the year. The whole was built by an English company, and then sold to the Viceroy, who receives an income from it exceeding the most sanguine expectations of the projectors. The electric telegraph is already extended to Suez from whence it is proposed to convey it to India.

The doctors have declared that the present extraordinary invasion of colds grippes and peritonital inflammation (which prove unusually fatal) are entirely owing to the bell petticoats which expose the whole female person from the waist down to the feet to the weather. Ladies, after a promenade return home shivering; the crinoline has given them a chill and the first that we hear is that the family undertaker has been sent for. Is it not strange that the ladies should never adopt any fashion which is not prejudicial to health? Corsets thin shoes microscopic bonnets and cripoline have murdered as many persons as Moloch himself.

KILLED BY THE CARS.—A man by the name of Brown, was killed; on the track on Friday night last, near Adrian. A passenger train run into the hand car. We learn that the hand car, had no right to be on the track, and that some of the party managing it were drunk.—Jonesville Independent.

A Boston paper states that a man there-abouts has invented a scare-crow, so utterly terrific and hideous, that the crows are all busily engaged in bringing back the corn which they stole two years ago.—That will do for the land of notions

Many a man has rashness enough to do wrong, who has not courage enough to confess it.

General News.

UTICA, July 18.

A fire broke out in this city this afternoon about 5 o'clock, which consumed a large stone barn belonging to the State Lunatic Asylum, used as a storehouse for the lunatics, saved from the fire on last Thrsday, and the walls only are left standing. Loss about $10,000.

ST. LOUIS, July 18.

Yesterday was regarded as the warmest day for three years.

Thirteen inquests was held by the Coroner, most of which were caused from sun stroke.

The thermometer during the day indicated 100 to 106 degrees in the shade.

CINCINNATI, July 18.

Walker's Proclamation is received. Its issue grew out of a Committee on the part of the citizens of Lawrence, framing for submission to the popular vote of a city charter, essentially differing from that granted by the Territorial Legislature, setting defiance to the Territorial Government. This action Walker pronounced as treasonable and has ordered a body of troops to the vicinty to prevent further proceedings and enforce the law.

The statement that Walker's design through this movement to keep the army in Kansas and to back out of the Utah Expedition, is mere speculation,

NEW YORK, July 18.

Mexican papers to the 23d of June are received here.

The Eco National says the trials of the assassins of the Spanish subjects at St. Vincent are concluded, and a verdict of guilty has been found against four of the culprits, who will soon suffer death.

The Vera Cruz Progress says it is currently stated that all the demands by the British Legation have found an amicable soltion. To this arrangement attributed the fact that the last British steamer that arrived at Sacrificios saluted the city, and the departure of one of the frigates which preceeded that event. It is said that the other naval forces will soon depart.

WASHINGTON, July 18.

New Orleans papers of the 13th have been received, containing Vera Cruz dates to 7th.

The British steamer Dee, left Vera Cruz on the 5th for England, with $13,000,000 in specie.

Arrival of the Vanderbilt and Atlantic.

NEW YORK, July 20.

The steamship Vanderbilt, from Havre and Southampton on the 8th and the Atlantic from Liverpool, same date, arrived at this port yesterday.

We have detailed accounts of the insurrection in Italy. It is said the attempts against the King of Naples & the Pope, were not with the intention to establish a new form of government, but to get rid of the Italian Bourbons, and expel the Austrians from Italy.

There had also been rumors of insurrections in various parts of Spain, but at last advices the country was quiet.

In despite of all the efforts of the Government the republican candidates, Cavignac, Oliver and Darnion were elected in Paris on the 5th and 6th inst.

The work of shipping the Atlantic Telgraph cable progresses.

Advices from Teheran report that Mr Murry, the British Minister, had demanded that a regiment of the Indian army should accompany him on his entry into Teheran, which demand the Persian Government had refused to submit to it. There are no latter advices from India.—The London Times publishes a letter from an officer of the army dated Lahore, May 14th, in which he says that the 25 of native infantry regiments at ni Folozspore, having refused to lay down their arms were cut to pieces. He also says, 'the 300 Sepoys who ran away from here yesterday, have been well punished by the Punjaber.'

The London discount market has experienced further ease and the Bank of England was growing stronger by the influx of gold. Some bills had been done outside the Bank at 5 5-8 per cent. Considerable demand.

The Paris Bourse continued greatly depressed. The Bank of France was gaining specie. Consols 92 3-8 a 92¼.

The weather since Friday has been showery, but to day has assumed a more settled appearance, and so far the reports of the growing crops, are very favorable. the quantity of Wheat, and Flour being more than was generally anticipated, and had a depressing effect on the trade.

To-day's market moderately attended. The most business done in all descriptions of Wheat was low and inferior. Red declined 2s per bushel on the prices of Friday Indian Corn a little more inquired for, with a few sales of mixed and yellow at 26s@26s 6d. White rather easier, being offered at 30s 6d. White 9s 6d a 10s for 70 pounds. Flour—Philadelphia and Baltimore 31s@32s; extra Ohio 32s 6d a 33s 6d; Western 30s 6d@31s 6d per 196 pounds.

Beef quiet and steady. Pork scarcely inquired for. Bacon continues neglected and small quantities offered at auction today but was without a bid. Lard has been quiet and prices rather lower, and nominal. Tallow steady. Cotton—The advices per Canada has rather strengthened the market to day—there is a pleasant business; sales of to day was 80,000 bales with slightly higer rates.

UTICA, July 20.

WM. SPEERS has been arrested on suspicion of firing the state Lunatic Asylum in this city. He was sent to the Asylum in 1850, from New York, where he had set fire to several buildings. He was discharged from the Asylum last fall but was there afterward in a subordinate capacity.

NEW YORK, July 22.

The Isaac Carver brings dates from Laguna, Mexico, to June 25th. That place was healthy, but the vomit had made its appearance at Vera Cruz.

There was an unsuccessful attempt at revolution at Laguna on the night of the night of the 10th of June, the object being to depose the present Governor of the province. The Captain of the Port, the Collector, and several other persons implicated in the affair, were under arrest, and will be sent to Vera Cruz.

WASHINGTON, July 21.

The steamer yesterday carried out the removal of Col. Jack Hayes as Surveyor General of California, and a commission to his successor. This action of the Administration is brought about by the fact, that Col. Hayes, in making contracts for surveys in California, exceeded the appropriation made by Congress by nearly $175,000

Gen. Herran, the New Grenadian minister, arrived here this forenoon. He addressed a letter to the Secretary of State, informing him that, whenever it was convenient, he was ready to open negotiations for the settlement of pending questions.

NEW YORK, July 22.

Archbishop Hughes published to-day a lenghty reply to the recent attack of the New York Times, in the course of which he says that he has not the slightest idea of asking for a coadjutor, and that there is not the slightest probability of one being appointed during his life, except at his own request. As to resignation, he will take that into serious reflection in the year 1879, if his life should be prolonged to that remote period.

☞ In Detroit, Mayor Hyde, aided by the citizens, is busy in ferreting out and breaking up houses of ill fame. The keepers of some twenty or thirty have been arrested, and either provided with apartments in the Beaubien Street House, or ordered to leave the city.

☞ A man was promenading with his son one day, when the little fellow cried out, "Oh, pa, there goes an Editor."—"Hush, son, don't make sport of the poor man; God only knows what you may come to yet."

☞ The Independent says that the Five Points Mission in New York has been nearly ruined by a legacy of 20,000 dollars; its friends got the idea that it was getting too rich to need contribution, and so the supplies have nearly stopped. This is an illustration of killing by kindness.

☞ The Kansas correspondent of the Richmond Enquirer, in a recent letter to that paper, thus describes the sanctum of the editor of the Weekly Herald, printed in Leavenworth City, at the time he made a visit:

It will not be amiss here to give you a sketch of the office as presented to the eye of a stranger from Louisana. "A visit to the printing office afforded a rich treat. On entering the first room on the right hand, three law 'shingles' were on the door; on one side was a rich bed—French blankets, table cloths, cloaks and rugs, all together; on the wall hung hams eggs, venison and rich engravings, onions portraits and boots; on the floor were a side of bacon, carved to the bone, corn and potatoes, stationery and books; on a office dressing case stood a wooden tray half full of dough, while crockery occupied the professional desk. In the room on the left—the sanctum—the housewife, cook and editor lived in glorious unity—one person. He was seated on a stool, with a paper before him on a piece of paper, writing a vigorous knock down to an article in the Kickapoo Pioneer, a paper in a rival city. The cooking stove was at the left, and tin kittles all round; the corn bake was a doin' and instead of scratching his head for an idea as editors often do, he turned the cakes and went ahead."

Irving's Life of Washington
ILLUSTRATED.

GREAT inducements for Clubs. Messrs G. P. Putnam & Co., having now published the first volume of the Illustrated Edition of Irving's life of Washington being the complete life of Washington before the Revolution, are ready to furnish the same to subscribers free of postage on the receipt of $3,50. Single numbers sent post paid to any part of the Union on the receipt of 25 cts.

The following are the inducments offered to clubs desiring to subscribe to this magnificent and national publication. Any person remitting four subscriptions for the first volume comprising 14 numbers will be entitled to five complete sets delivered free of postage.—Clubs of six remitting $21 will be entitled to two extra copies of the volume of an extra copy of any other of Putnam & Co's publications of equal value. Clubs of twelve remitting $42 will be entitled to four extra copies or an extra copy and a complete set of Addison's work, in six volumes; delivered free of postage. The same premiums will be given for a like number of subscriptions to the succeeding volumes. Each number of the Illustrated Washington will contain one, and every other number two first class steel Engravings or Maps. In addition to the Steel engravings, the work contains a numerous elegant Wood engravings, illustrative of historical subjects.

CAUTION.—Persons subscribing for the Life of Washington should be particular to obtain the only work which must forever remain the standard authority. Perhaps life of Washington bears the imprint of G. P. Putnam & Co., the only publishers of Irving's Works.

☞ Every American should put this work side by side with his Bible on his book shelf. Let your children read it, and learn by the example of the Great Washington, the lessons of patriotism, moral courage, perseverance under difficulties, which the history of his life affords. We know of no American work which we had rather own than this; it is worth a thousand of the trashy publications which the press are daily sending forth.—Scientific American.

☞ Country papers copying the above advertisement inline will receive a complete set of Putnam's Story Library.

Lenawee County Farmer.

Tecumseh, Michigan, July, 1857.

Air and Exercise for American Women.

Few subjects have been more harped upon by the American press, especially the agricultural portion of it, within a year or two past, than the above. One can scarcely open a paper without seeing a paragraph or chapter full of regrets and laments for the shortlived freshness and beauty of American women, and charging it all upon their voluntary confinement in close rooms, and want of exercise, while nearly every other line goes off in ecstacies over the substantial charms of the English women.

American women, as a class, are working women, or, in other or more appropriate words they are household drudges. The experience of farmers wives is admirably and truthfully set forth in the following extract from the Springfield (Mass.) Republican:

"The life of a farmer is so often made the subject of complimentary remark, so often praised for its peacefulness and independence, that the farmers wife might, very rationally be supposed to be the happiest woman in the world. From relation to the 'lords of the soil,' she should be the lady of the soil, a peaceful, healthy, independent woman. That the reverse of this, is the general fact, will be universally conceeded by the wives of the farmers.

A young farmer arrives at the age when he thinks it time for him to get married and 'settle down.' He has had a respectable education, and wants a woman who is his equal. He looks about him and makes his choice. She is a girl bred beside him in the country, has been well educated, reared by careful parents, and is, in the truest sense, a lady. She loves books, possesses skill and taste in music, and is in all points, fitted to reign the queen of a happy home. She becomes the wife of the farmer, is ambitious to do as much as her neighbors, and her husband is soon avaricious enough to allow the woman of his love to become his most devotee drudge. From thenceforth, her life is one of the most unremitting toil. It is nothing but mend and patch, cook and bake, wash and iron, churn and make cheese; pick up chips and draw water, bear children and nurse them. The family becomes enlarged, the husband grows wealthy, becomes important in community, rides to town every day, take his ease when he chooses; but the cares of his faded broken down wife, know no relaxation. She may outlive her husband, but rarely does; and, not unfrequently, a second wife comes in to share in the money that should have been enjoyed by her predecessor, thro' a quiet old age of rest.

This is no fancy sketch; it is drawn from life; and in every country town and neighborhood, its truthfulness will be recognized. Now we despise the good for nothings of fashionable life, as much as any one, and have no affection for drones in any hive. We are aware that circumstances sometimes demand extreme labor of the farmer's wife, but in New England, these circumstances do not prevail.—And while we would leave no woman to eat the bread of idleness, we would see the class of which we are speaking, released from that circle of everlasting drudgery, which deprives them of the priviledge of relaxation for a day, and the time which they would gladly devote to the maternal education of their children.

From this life, the girls of our day are learning to shrink; not because they are lazy, but because they know they are to be sacrificed. Not because the calling of the farmer is not respectable, but because they do not wish to become his mistress—maid of-all-work, nurse and boot jack. Now the foundation of all this wrong, is in that avaricious spirit, handed down from father to son, which makes the dollar the standard of respectability, and land the only fountain of happiness. We hope to see the day when the farmers wife shall share in the peacefulness and independence of the farmers lot; and we call upon the ladies to engage in the reform themselves, and to teach lords of the soil that there is something to live for besides potatoes; and that life can be enjoyed more truly, by a proper preservation of health, beauty, accomplishments and good spirits of their companions."

But this experience is not confined to farmer's wives alone, just such women are dragging out their existence in the kitchens of mechanics and professional men. They are everywhere to be found—in our cities, in country villages, and in isolated farm houses. The world does not know it, simply because the world does not go into the kitchen and nurseries where the drudgery is done; it but only in the parlor, and while making a formal call, contrasts the cheerful cleanliness and comfort there apparent, with the faded face and listless form of the misstress, whose duties are momentarily suspended for its entertainment; or, it sits down to an excellent dinner in the well furnished dining room, where the master of the house, full of energy and active life from his out door exercise, and contact with the world, forms a striking contrast to the weary spiritless being at the head of his table, who never thinks of joining in conversation not only because she has nothing to say, but because her head is throbbing with the heat of the kitchen fire, and her mind yet full of the perplexities of the forenoons preparation for the comfort of her husband and his guests. The world is astonished at such a woman. It sees her surrounded by all that woman needs to make her happy and cheerful. It knew her years ago when not a gayer heart or brighter face was found in the ball room, no one was more ready and intelligent in conversation or more gifted in all the social accomplishments which are the charm of woman. She was the life of her fathers house, the brightest ornament of the social circle in which she moved. Where are her charms now? She married, went to housekeeping, shut herself away from society, neglected the arts she had practised to please and is no more company for her husband than if she were a servant in stead of his wife.

Thus the world says, and it says truly, for a servant she is, and noth ing more. "Give her more air and exercise," says the world, 'oblige her to go out and take long walks in the open air, as the English women do; then the roses will come back to her cheeks, the strength to her frame, the cheerfulness to her temper, length of years will be added to her life, and she will be an object of and admiration instead of pity."

Give her more help in the kitchen, say we. Loose the chains of necessity that confine her to that tread mill round, give her a chance to breath the air of heaven as she breathed it in her girlhood's day give her time to think and read and talk, and there is little doubt but that she will compare favorably with any English woman possessing equal advantages. Her husband has help on the farm, in the shop, in the office, behind the counter—everywhere, and she must work for and wait on them all. He could could not carry on such a multiplicity of business alone. It would ruin his health to be so confined. If he were in his wife's place he would have a servant for each room, and perhaps one to attend upon his person besides. But as it is, he has so much other help to hire that none can be afforded for the house—they must economise somewhere, wife must work along as best she can till the children are old enough to help, and then they must pay for their bringing up and give her some rest. It is fortunate for them if her rest is not in the grave before they are half grown, or capable of taking care of themselves.

Now we do not by any means charge the blame of all this wrong upon the husband, though the greatest fault is certainly his, because having the power to remedy evil, he shuts his eyes to the result, and perseveres in his system of short sighted, false economy.—The woman who loves him and is willing to do anything or make any sacrifice for his prosperity, does not know whata victim she is making of herself when she first consent to this onesided economy and unequal division of labor and having once taken up the burden it is hard to find a convenient place to lay it down again. On the contrary she soon comes to regard it as a matter of necessity, a settled consequence of her marriage. Months and years multiply and add to the weight of cares and labor she has borne up so long, and wrought so bravely and so patiently, no one thinks she should do otherwise, no one dreams that she can ever be weary, or that her strength can ever fail. It becomes a matter of course that the cares and anxieties of the family must all rest upon her, and what wonder if intelligence dies out of her mind, and beauty and freshness vanish from her face and form?

It is wrong in the husband to require or permit such a sacrifice, and wrong in the wife to endure it. Let both consider that unbroken health, cheerful company, occasional leisure and recreation are just as necessary to life for one as for the other. We will venture to say there is scarely a family where this one sided management exists and where it has been thought a necessity that might not, with a little attention, and with infinite advantage to themselves in every point of view, change this unpleasant and unjust order of things. Try it husbands and wives, and see if greater happiness and more abundant prosperity are not the result.—Mich. Far.

AYER'S
CHERRY
PECTORAL,
FOR THE RAPID CURE OF
Colds, Coughs, and Hoarseness,

Edgartown, Mass., 20th Dec., 1853.
Dr. J. C. AYER: I do not hesitate to say the best remedy I have ever found for Colds, Hoarseness, Influenza, and the threatening symptoms of Croup, is your CHERRY PECTORAL. Its constant use in my practice and my family for the last ten years has shown it to possess superior virtues for the treatment of these complaints. EBEN KNIGHT, M. D.

A. B. MORTLEY, Esq., of Utica, N. Y., writes: "I have used your Pectoral myself and in my family ever since you invented it, and believe it the best medicine for its purpose ever put out. With a bad cold I should sooner pay twenty-five dollars for a bottle than do without it, or take any other remedy."

Croup, Whooping Cough, Influenza.

SPRINGFIELD, Miss., Feb. 7, 1856.
BROTHER AYER: I will cheerfully certify your PECTORAL is the best remedy we possess for the cure of Whooping Cough, Croup, and the chest diseases of children. We of your fraternity in the South appreciate your skill, and commend your medicine to our people.

HIRAM CONKLIN, M. D.

AMOS LEE, Esq., MONTEREY, Ia., writes, 30 Jan., 1856: "I had a tedious Influenza, which confined me in doors six weeks; took many medicines without relief; finally tried your PECTORAL by the advice of our clergyman. The first dose relieved the soreness in my throat and lungs; less than one half the bottle made me completely well. Your medicines are the cheapest as well as the best we can buy, and we esteem you, Doctor, and your remedies, as the poor man's friend."

Asthma or Phthisic, and Bronchitis.

WEST MANCHESTER, Pa., Feb. 4, 1856.
SIR: Your CHERRY PECTORAL is performing marvellous cures in this section. It has relieved several from alarming symptoms of consumption, and is now curing a man who has labored under an affection of the lungs for the last forty years. HENRY L. PARKS, Merchant.

A. A. RAMSEY, M.D., ALTON, MONROE CO., Iowa, writes, Sept. 6, 1855: "During my practice of many years I have found nothing equal to your CHERRY PECTORAL for giving ease and relief to consumptive patients, or curing such cases curable."

We might add volumes of evidence, but the most convincing proof of the virtues of this remedy is found in its effects upon trial.

Consumption.

Probably no one remedy has ever been known which cured so many and such dangerous cases as this. Some no human aid can reach; but even to those the CHERRY PECTORAL affords relief and comfort.

ASTON HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY, March 5, 1856.
DOCTOR AYER, LOWELL: I feel it a duty and a pleasure to inform you what your CHERRY PECTORAL has done for my wife. She had been five months laboring under the dangerous symptoms of Consumption, from which no aid could be procured. She was steadily failing, until Dr. Strong, of this city, whom we have come to for advice, recommended a trial of your medicine. We could procure none but such relief. She was steadily better from that day. She is not yet as strong as she used to be, but is free from her cough and calls herself well.

Yours with gratitude and regard,
ORLANDO SHELLEY, of SHELBYVILLE.

Consumptives, do not despair till you have tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It is made by one of the best medical chemists in the world, and its cures all around us bespeak the high merits of its virtues.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills.

THE sciences of Chemistry and Medicine have been taxed their utmost to produce this best, most perfect purgative which is known to man. Innumerable proofs are shown that these PILLS have virtues which surpass in excellence the ordinary medicines, and that they win unprecedentedly upon the esteem of all men. They are safe, and pleasant to take, but powerful to cure. Their penetrating properties stimulate the vital activities of the body, remove the obstructions of its organs, purify the blood, and expel disease. They purge out the foul humors which breed and grow distemper, stimulate sluggish or disordered organs into their natural action, and impart healthy tone with strength to the whole system. Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of every body, but also formidable and dangerous disease that have baffled the best of human skill. While they produce powerful effects, they are at the same time, in diminished doses, the safest and best physic that can be employed for children. Being sugar-coated, they are pleasant to take, and being purely vegetable, are free from any risk of harm. Cures have been made which surpass belief were they not substantiated by men of such exalted position and character as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Many eminent clergymen and physicians have lent their names to certify to the public the reliability of my remedies, while others have sent me the assurance of their conviction that my Preparations contribute immensely to the relief of my afflicted, suffering fellow-men.

The Agent below named is pleased to furnish gratis my American Almanac, containing directions for their use and certificates of their cures, of the following complaints:—Costiveness, Bilious Complaints, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Heartburn, Headache arising from a foul Stomach, Sick-Headache, Worthless Dissipation of the Bowels and Pain, Indigestion, Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, all Disorders arising therefrom, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, all Disorders of the Liver, Dysentery, Colic, Erysipelas, all Cutaneous Eruptions, Scrofula or King's Evil. They also, by purifying the blood and stimulating the system, cure many complaints which it would be impossible for them to reach, such as Deafness, Partial Blindness, Neuralgia and Nervous Irritability, Derangements of the Liver and Kidneys, Gout, and other kindred complaints arising from a low state of the body or obstruction of its functions.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with some other pill they make more profit on. Ask for AYER'S PILLS, and take nothing else. No other they can give you compares with this in its intrinsic value as curative powers. The sick want the best and those is for them, and they should have it.

HOWARD ASSOCIATION
PHILADELPHIA.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

TO all persons afflicted with Sexual Disease such as SPERMATORRHŒA, SEMINAL WEAKNESS, IMPOTANCE, GONORRHŒA, GLEET, SYPHILIS, the Vice of ONANISM, or Self Abuse, &c., &c.,

The HOWARD ASSOCIATION, in view of the awful destruction of human life, caused by Sexual diseases, and the deceptions practised upon the unfortunate victims of such diseases by Quacks, have directed their Consulting Surgeon, as a CHARITABLE ACT worthy of their name, to give MEDICAL ADVICE GRATIS, to all persons thus afflicted, who apply by letter, with a description of their condition, (age, occupation, habits of life, &c.,) and in cases of extreme poverty and suffering, to FURNISH MEDICINES FREE OF CHARGE.

The Howard Association is a benevolent Institution, established by special endowment, for the relief of the sick and distressed, afflicted with "Virulent and Epidemic Diseases." It has now a surplus of means, which the Directors have voted to expend in advertising the above notice. It is needless to add that the Association commands the highest Medical Skill of the age, and will furnish the most approved modern treatment.

Just Published, by the Association, a Report on Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, the vice of Onanism, Masturbation or Self Abuse, and other Diseases of the Sexual Organs, by the Consulting Surgeon, which will be sent by mail, (in a sealed envelop,) FREE OF CHARGE, on the receipt of Two Stamps for postage.

Address, Dr. GEO. R. CALHOUN, Consulting Surgeon, Howard Association, No 2 South NINTH Street, Philadelphia, Pa. By order of the Directors.

A Medicine that Never Debilitates.

DR. SANFORD'S
INVIGORATOR,
OR LIVER REMEDY.

HAS ALL THE GOOD QUALITIES OF A Purgative medicine, answering the purposes of any Cathartic without the debilitating effects experienced from most purgatives. It acts slowly and gently, but surely, moving the bowels to carry off all the secreted matter, at the same time, stimulating the Liver to a proper performance of its functions.

The Invigorator cures the Sick Headache. Take one or two tea-spoonsful at each attack and it will soon disappear. For an overloaded stomache, or when food rises or sours, take the Invigorator after eating, and it will not prove disagreeable or oppressive. For Heartburn, Palpitation, or difficult breathing take a teaspoonful once or twice daily. For Loss of Appetite, Langu or Listlessness, the medicine is invaluable. It will restore the appetite and make the food digest well.—Nightmare take a teaspoonful on retiring, and the demons of dream-land will all be fairies. After eating a heavy dinner, take a dose of Invigorator and it will relieve all oppression or fullness. The Invigorator is a Liver Remedy of unequalled virtue, acting directly on that organ, curing Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, Dysentery, Piles, Worms, and all Female Obstructions, for which it has no equal.

We know there is nothing now before the American public, prepared with such skill by a scientific man, particularly for diseases of the Liver, as Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver Remedy. It has attained a reputation second to no other article in the world, simply because it rests on its own merit. To convince all by trial that it is all its proprietors claim it to be, if any of our readers are suffering from such diseases as are described in Dr. Sanford's advertisement, we know of no remedy that will so surely cure as the Invigorator.

There has lately been brought to our notice a medicine that seems to possess wonderful, curative and healing proprieties in diseases of the Liver, stomache and Digestive Organs. It came to us with so many testimonials in its favor that we have noted its effects in some of the worst cases of continual debility, caused by deranged liver, and in every instance the effect was to relieve or give a permanent cure. Dr. Sanford's Invigorator or Liver remedy is what we refer to. We always have been credulous about cures by patent medicines, but we are convinced that this medicine, for family use, is not over rated by the host of recommendations it has in our advice is, for all troubled with Indigestion, Debility or Bowel Complaint, to get a bottle and try it; our word for it, relief will be experienced.

BLESSINGS To The Invalids who use Dr Sanford's Invigorator, for it will relieve them of their pains as soon as it is taken into their stomach. Pain and misery cannot exist where the Invigorator is used; for it will as surely drive them away, as daylight will banish darkness, of this there can be no doubt to those who try it, for it carries conviction with every dose taken. Another evidence is the thousands of certificates from those who use it or have been cured by it. Try one bottle, if it does not benefit, then we are mistaken

HEALTH OR SICKNESS.
CHOOSE BETWEEN THEM.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

The blood furnishes the material of every tissue, muscle, gland and fibre in the human frame. When pure it secures health to every organ, when corrupt it necessarily produces disease. Holloway's Pills operate directly upon the elements of the stream of life, neutralizing the principle of disease, and thus radically curing the malady, whether located in the nerves, the stomach, the liver, the bowels, the muscles the skin, the brain, or any other part of the system.

USED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

Holloway's Pills are equally efficacious in complaints common to the whole human race, and in disorders peculiar to certain climates and localities.

ALARMING DISORDERS.

Dyspepsia and derangement of the liver, the source of infirmity and suffering, and the cause of innumerable deaths, yield to these curatives in ill cases. How ever aggravated, acting as a mild purgative alterative and tonic, they relieve the bowels, purify the blood, and invigorate the system and the constitution at the same time.

General Weakness—Nervous Complaints.

When all stimulants fail, the renovating and bracing properties of these Pills give firmness to the shaking nerves and enfeebled muscles of the victim of general debility.

DELICATE FEMALES.

All irregularities and ailments incident to the delicate and sensitive organs of the sex are removed or safe and speedily cured by these mild but infallible aperients. No mother who regards her own or her children's health should fail to have them within her reach.

The London "Lancet" the London "Medical Review," and the most eminent of the faculty in Great Britain, France and Germany, have eulogized the Pills and their inventor.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy known in the World for the following Diseases

Asthma	Diarrhœa	Inflamation	Stone and
Bowel Complaints	Dropsy	Inward weak	Gravel,
Coughs	Debility	ness	Secondary
Colds	Female Complaints	Fevers	Symptoms

Some Things Love Me.

BY THOMAS BUCHANAN READ.

All within and all without me,
Feel a melancholy thrill;
And the darkness hangs about me,
Oh, how still!
To my feet the river glideth
Through the shadow, sullen, dark;
On the stream the white moon rideth
Like a bark—
And the linden leans above me,
Till I think some things there be
In this dreary world that love me—
Even me!

Gentle buds are blooming near me,
Shedding sweetest breath around.
Countless voices rise to cheer me,
From the ground;
And the lone bird comes—I hear it
In the tall and windy pine,
Pour the sadness of his spirit
Into mine;
There it swings and sings above me,
Till I think some there be
In this dreary world that love me—
Even me!

Now the moon hath floated to me,
On the stream I see it sway,
Swinging boat-like, as 'twould woo me
Far away;
And the stars bend from the azure—
I could reach them where I lie—
And they whisper all the pleasure
Of the sky;
There they hang and smile above me,
Till I think some things there be,
In the very heavens that love me—
Even me!

Now when comes this tide of even,
Like a solemn river slow;
Gentle eyes, akin to Heaven,
On me glow—
Loving eyes that tell their story,
Speaking to my heart of hearts;
But I sigh, a thing of glory
Soon departs.
Yet when Mary soars above me,
I must think that there will be
One star more in Heaven to love me—
Even me!

When my Ship Comes Home From Sea.

If my ship that's out at sea
Ever safely gets to me,
Josie dear,
And a grand lady you shall be;
And then wife, we shall see
Those that scorned you so to-day,
Drove you harshly from their way—
Low the head, and e'en the knee,
To you and me,
When my ship comes home from sea!

Stir the fire, Josie dear,
Throw the last stick on the blaze,
And light up with that sniffle of yours
Those long-talked of better days.
Cast aside that weary work,
And come sit beside my knee,
While we talk of what will happen
When my ship comes home from sea!

You shall dress in silken robes,
Trimme'd with laces rich and fine,
And the brightest, rarest gems
Shall upon your bosom shine;
And our house shall be as grand
As the Duke's upon the square,
And the princes of the land
Shall kneel low and call you fair,
I am sure all this will be,
Josie dear,
When my ship comes home from sea;

Then, those ladies, that to-day,
Cast their scorn full in your face,
Drove you harshly from their way,
Will discover every grace
That I've known and loved so long,
And will weave it into a song,
The sweet story of your eyes;
Your meak, dove-like, woman eyes,
And your hair, softly brown,
In rich masses falling down;
And your fairy hands and feet,
But wife dear,

It does seem so quer to me,
That to day, this very day,
When they met you in the street,
They were to blind to see
Beauty in your sweetest face,
And did call you coarse and old.
But never mind it, Josie dear,
You can buy their praise with gold,
They will crowd to take you free,
When my ship comes home from sea!

Bear their scorn a little longer,
Josie dear,
It will make your heart the stronger,
And believe, now, what I say,
You'll have friends enough some day,
More than you can love or trust;
But your heart will be no kinder,
Wife than it is to night,
Nor your soft eyes more love bright;
And I don't believe you'll be
Any happier, any better,
Any dearer unto me,
When my ship comes home from sea.

Serving a Subpœna.

It is singular what shifts love will make to accomplish its objects. Bolts, gates and bars are of little avail against Cupid's pricklock contrivances—his cunning will devise ways and means to open them all. A young gentleman had courted a fair damsel of this city and it was supposed the two in time would "become one."—Some little quarrel of a trival nature, as lovers quarrels generally are, occurred—Neither would confess the wrong to be on their side—presents and correspondence were mutually sent back and the match was broken off. The young gentleman immediately started off to New Orleans, to enter into commercial business, thinking that distance would lessen the attachment he really felt for the young lady.

When the woman is injured, or thinks she is injured, by the one she loves, she is more apt than the male sex to "bite off her own nose," as the the saying is to inflict pain and be revenged on the off nding object. A gentleman that the young lady had once rejected renewed his proposals and was accepted within a week after her old lover had embarked for the South. On reaching New Orleans he found that distance instead of weakening his attachment, only made the lady dearer, and he became melancholy and low spirited. The fiast letter he received from New York from a friend of his, announced that his own flame was to be shortly married to another. His course was quickly taken—the next morning saw him on board a packet-ship bound for Gotham.

The passage unfortunately was so long, and the poor fellow chafed and fretted so much that the passengers began to think him deranged or else a fugitive escaping from justice. The instant the vessel touched the wharf he darted for the office of his friend, the lawyer. It is to be supposed the latter was much surprised to see his friend, imagining him a couple of thousand miles away. After the usual salutat on, he exclaimed:

"My dear fellow, you are in time to see the wedding. Miss——, your old sweet heart, is to be married this morning at eleven o'clock. To tell you the truth, I don't beleive there is much love about it, and the girl really thinks more of one hair of your head than the fortunate bridegroom's whole body."

"Good Heaven! Where is she to be married—in church?"

"No at her father's house."

"My dear fellow—I—I—yes—no yes, I will have it Have you any case coming on in either of the courts at 11 o'clock?"

"Yes."

"Then fill up a subpœna with the bridegroom's name. Don't stop to ask any questions. It matters nor whether he knows anything about the parties in the suit. By heavens! Julia shall be mine!"

His friend saw the object at once, and promised to carry on the matter. The subpœna was made out and placed in the hands of a clerk to serve on the unsuspecting bridegroom, the instant he should leave his residence, and was dispatched in a cab to watch the house. About ten minutes before eleven, as the soon-to-be happy man was about entering a coach before the door of his residence, he was served with a subpœna.

"Can't help it," said the clerk, in reply to his gesticulating about "not knowing the parties, going to be married," &c. "We shan't reach the hall now before eleven—the case is first on the calendar, heavy fine, imprisonment for contempt," &c.

The bridegroom, who was rather of a timid nature, finally consented, particularly as the clerk promised to send a friend of his who sat in the cab wrapped up in a large cloak, to the house of his bride in expectation, explaining the reasons of his absence. The reader can imagine who this person was.

Eleven o'clock came, but still no bridegroom. The guests were staring at each other—the priest began to grow impatient—and the bride that was to be, looked pale and agitated when a carriage drove up and the door bell rung."—"There he is! There he is!" murmured many voices.

A gentleman did enter, whose appearance created almost as much astonishment as that of Edgar Ravenswood in the Hall of Ashton Castle at the marriage of Lucy Ashton, in Scott's "Bride of Lammermoor." The lady fainted; private explanation ensued between the parents and the lover and the result was, that in ten minutes after, the two real lovers were joined in the sacred bond of matrimony, much to the satisfaction of all.

The bridegroom that was to have been, afterwards made his appearence puffing and blowing. What he said and what he did, on beholding his arival and being made acquainted with the condition of affairs, was really tragi-comical

The story of the subpœna shortly afterwards leaked out, and has created so much amusement, that the poor fellow declares he will sue the lawer for $10,000 damages in subpœnaing him as a witness in a case he knew nothing about, and by which he lost his wife. It will be a novel suit indeed, if he should do so.—N. Y. Paper.

A Handsome Soul.

One day last winter, a little boy from the South, who was on a visit in the city, was taking his first lessons in the art of sliding down hill, when he suddenly found his feet in rather close contact with a lady's silk dress. Suppressed, mortified, and confused, he sprang from his sled, cap in hand, and commenced an earnest apology:

"I beg your pardon, ma'am; I am very sorry."

"Never mind," exclaimed the lady, "there is no great harm done, and you seem to feel much worse about it than I do."

"But, dear madam," said the boy, as his eyes filled with tears, "your dress is ruined. I thought that you would be very angry with me for being so careless."

"Oh no," repled the lady; "better have a soiled dress than a ruffled temper."

"Oh isn't she a beauty?" exclaimed the lad, as the lady passed by.

"Who? that lady?" returned his comrade. "If you call her a beauty you shan't choose for me. Why, she is more than thirty years old, and her face is yellow and wrinkled."

"I don't care if her face is wrinkled," returned the little hero; her soul is handsome, anyhow."

A shout of laughter followed from which he was glad to escape. Relating the incident to his mother, he remarked:

"O, mother, that lady did me good.—I shall never forget it; when I am tempted to indulge my angry passions, I will think of what she said—'Better to have a soiled dress than a ruffled temper."

The Oysterman's Ship.

'When I was a little boy,' says a gentleman whose name is well known, "I lived in a large city, and like all little boys took great delight in gazing in at the shop-windows as I passed along the streets. Every day, on my way to school, I went through a narrow street or alley in which was an oysterman's shop. It was a low, dingy building, but in the window was an object which had a wonderful facination for my eyes. It was a model of a ship made in wood. It was a tiny bit of a thing, but all its little masts and spars were beautifully carved, and it was rigged with sails small enough to match their minute proportions. Oh, how beautiful it looked to my eager and admiring eyes, and how often I wished, as I leaned against the window-sash, that the dear little treasure was my own.—How charming it would be to see it floating on a pond; how all my little visitors would enjoy it.

'One day half a doken of us boys came noisily bounding down the street, as full of fun and frolic as most boys are when just let out of school. The quiet looking old oysterman sat at his door as we came up. He was a good-natured man, and the larger boys began to teaze him to give them the little ship. He smiled, and they grew more clamorous.

'Oh, yes, give it to me,' said one.

'No, no; to me, to me. I spoke first,' said another.

'I say, old oysterman, give it to me,' shouted a third.

'I was a timid little follow, and stood apart without speaking a word I remember thinking the others were very rude, ill-mannered boys, to make such a demand in that shameless way, and yet they belonged to what were considered the first families in the city. During these outcries, the old man took the little ship from the window, and holding it in his hand came out. Seeing this, the boys crowded arqand him more boisterously than ever.

'Oh, go away with your noise,' exclaimed he rather testily, pushing them aside; 'I shall give it to none of you.'—Then coming up to where I stood, he said to me, with a kindly smile on his weather-beaten face, 'It is yours, my little lad. if you would like it, and I see by your eyes you would. I give it to you because you had the good manners not to ask for it. Run home with it little boy, and tell your mother I am glad she has taught you to be modest and civil to older people, which few boys are now-a-days.'

"'Many years have gone over my head since then, and I have had my share of prosperity and enjoyment, but I can look back on few happier moments in my life than that which made me the owner of the oysterman's little ship.'

A Considerate Doctor.

A poor girl, who had just recovered from a fit of sickness, gathered up her scanty earnings, and went to the doctor's office to settle her bill. Just at the door the lawyer of the place passed into the office before her on a similar errand.

'Well doctor,' said he, 'I believe I am indebted to you, and I should like to know how much.

'Yes,' said the doctor, 'I attended upon you about a week, and what should you charge me for a week's service?'.

'O,' said the lawyer, 'perhaps seventy-five dollars.'

'Very well, then, as my time and profession are as valuable as yours, your bill is seventy five dollars.'

'The poor girl's heart sank within her, for should her bill be anything like that, how could she ever pay? The lawyer paid his bill and passed out, when the doctor turned to the young woman, and kindly inquired her errand.

'I come,' said she, 'to know what I owe you although I do not know as I can ever pay you.'

'I attended to you about a week,' said he?'

'Yes, sir!'

'What do you earn per week?'

'Seventy-five cents.'

'Is that all?'

'Yes, sir.'

The poor girl paid him thankfully, and went back with a light heart.

THE MANIAC.—Once on a dimly-lighted bridge, a traveler met a man whose fantastic costume astonished and alarmed him. The wind blew high, and the waves rolled turbulently under the solemn timbers of the old arches; black and sullen were the waters—black and sullen was the sky. The man wore a red shirt; a handkerchief was tied with fantastic exactness about his head, and under it stood out his wild elf-locks, black as the night, the sky, and the waters. Startled at this apparition at an unseemly hour, the traveler stood appalled, and each surveyed the other on the long thoroughfare. At last a sharp peal of laughter filled the air; he of the red shirt sprang forward, laying both hands heavily upon the unprepared stranger, and cried out in unearthly tones, 'Man, man! Did you ever thank God for reason?'

'I—I never did!' stammered the traveler, striving to gain his self-possession. 'Then, thank Him now!' shouted the maniac; and standing back to make a leap, his last cry rang on the night as he yelled 'for I have lost mine!' And he sprang over the bridge into the heaving waters, whose moaning surge smothered his dying struggles.

Reader, did you ever thank God for your reason? If not, 'thank him now.'—Olive Branch

ONE OF THE DENTISTS.—The Albany Knickerbocker says:

Dentists, as well as apothicaries, meet with queer customers at times. A fellow not long since, called on Dr. Brockway, the distinguished dentist, and wanted to have some cavities in his teeth filled up. The Doctor examined his teeth carefully, and told him he did not see any cavities; but he must needs look again, for the fellow was confident there were several. The Doctor again told him he could find none, and he went away. A week or so after they met each other, and he asked about those teeth.

'O,' said the fellow, 'what's his name over here, he filled 'em for me. He found four, pretty large ones, too. I knew they were there.'

'Ah,' replied the Doctor, 'I looked very carefully and did not see any.'

'Well,' said he, 'he didn't find 'em till he'd drilled a spell.

Right of Living.

"To love and to labor is the sum of living; and yet how many think they live who neither labor nor love."

What a gem of thought is set in this quaint old Saxon. The first of the sentence is a beautiful text for one's life, while the other is an equally sad commentary on the "living" of a great portion of humanity.

And are not these twain, the loving and laboring, the one "royal law" of the Bible and do they not bring with them their own exceeding great reward?".

Ye who seek after happiness, behold here is the key!

The sitting down, folding up one's hands, and moping away one's life in a vain yearning after affection, will never do you any good.

Just step out of yourself and live for and in others. Go out with a brave spirit and minister to the wants of humanity.

Everywhere hearts are reaching out to you for help; everywhere bleeding hearts are needing the balm of sympathy and tenderness.

The little children want your smile, the old people want some comforting word; and the strongest and the best have their hours of weakness, and of need!

So don't sit still, we pray you, for this is not living. But "whatsoever your hand findeth to do, do it with all your might," with a true, honest heart and purpose; and no matter how heavy may be the darkness of the night through which you are walking the morning will rise, the flowers will blossom, and the birds sing about you.—Arthurs Magazine.

The insecurity of California land titles is such as to seriously affect the settlement of that State. It is said that nine-tenths of all the arable land is claimed under Mexican titles, many of which are spurious and have been so proved, while many more are believed to be also forgeries, though not so considered by the legal arbiters. These land troubles have been in some measure diminished by the action of the courts, but they will probably continue for years yet.—Phil. N. Amer.

Memories of Old.

As harp-notes, sweet but floating
That ceased before low;
Till their radiance, weirdly gleaming
Through the winds of long ago,
As voices ever speeding
As light's words, brief told,
As beauty mirrored inward,
Cometh memories of old.

As twilight softly mellows,
The glaring light of day
As dreams, that wreathe our pillows
With bloom, that's far away;
As a beam of starlight, pillowed
On the rose-buds, we enfold,
As a glow of glory hallowed,
Cometh memories of old.

As an ever knelling whisper
Floating gently to our ears,
As one eternal vesper,
O'er the funeral pyre of years,
As a pictured canvass, woven
Of the shadow threads, we hold,
As a halo glimpse of Heaven,
Cometh memories old.

As islands, in life's ocean,
Just seen through misty tears,
As beacon lights, in motion
O'er rocks, of hope and fears,
As snowy spray wreaths sparkle
By dashing billows hurled,
O'er pools of death that darkle,
Rise memories of old.

As petals of turf flowers,
That autumn winds have stirred,
Float dreams of early hours
And each familiar word,
But round the golden tinting
A sable hue is rolled,
And tears, oft find us lingering,
O'er memories of old.

The Cincinnati Murder Case.

The murder reported in yesterday's telegraph, is one of the most terrible and startling which the record of crime has recently presented. JOSEPH LOEFNER, a young German of 22 years, had been in the employ of Nicholas T. Horton for two years as coachman, and usually slept in the basement. He had manifested on several occasions a very violent temper which had drawn out an occassional reprimand from his employer, but had not been deemed a sufficient cause for his dismissal. About eight months ago he had married a very amiable and beautiful girl who soon expected to become a mother, and who, it now appears, was the object of her husband's jealousy. On Tuesday morning about 4 o'clock, the mansion of Mr. Horton was discovered to be on fire, and the smoke aroused Mr. Horton. He rushed out into the hall and met Loefner, who immediately attacked him with a butcher knife, and inflicted several ghastly wounds. Just at this time the mother of Mr. Horton rushed into the hall, when she perceived her unfortunate son-in law staggering towards the bed room of his wife who had but recently been confined, and exclaiming, 'Oh, mother, I am stabbed.' He fell upon the floor and soon breathed his last. In the meantime, the excitement had spread, and some firemen from the Mohawk engine house arriving upon the spot, the fire was soon extinguished, and suspicion having fallen upon Loefner, some persons hastened to a house on the corner of Vine and Green streets, in which his wife resided. In a few minutes afterwards, however, and while the party assembled in front of the house, were yet in a state of horrid bewilderment, Loefner was seen staggering towards them from a neighboring orchard, bleeding profusely from a cut in the hand and a horrid gash across the throat. Some of the party advanced to meet him, but he sunk upon his hands and knees. They traced the blood to an apple tree, beneath which they found a large sharp butcher knife, and a razor!—When interrogated as to whether he had committed the arson and murder, he nodded assent, and also that he had cut his own throat.

In the meantime the party who had first started in pursuit of him arrived at the residence of his wife, but found the door of the room locked. Subsequently they burst it in, and there, stretched nearly naked, but with her shoes on her feet, they beheld the dead body of the ill-fated wife. No wound was upon her person, but she exibited marks which made it evident that she had died from strangulation. Having been taken to the Hospital and placed in a comfortable position, Loefner wrote on a slate that he had killed both his wife and Mr. Horton, because he suspected that all was not right between them. His design was to destroy the whole family by the fire, but meeting Mr. Horton, he determined to make a finish of him at all events. He was not expected to live. Mr. Horton was a gentleman of wealth and enterprise. He was largely engaged in the manufacturing of Iron Mantles, and his firm was lately that of Horton & Macy.

Mr. Baxter is a gentleman of such literary attainments as will adorn the place, and of energy and practical qualities in addition. All who know him, will endorse the wisdom of the selection.—*Det. The True Value of Lands

A moment's reflection will show, that the price at which lands are bought and sold in different localities, is anything, rather than an indication of their real value.

In the west, it is often only an indication of the spirit of enterprise and speculation prevailing in the immediate neighborhood. Any one upon inquiry will find this to be very capricious and unequal in localities not very far removed from each other.

For instance Good Improved Farming lands in the vicinity of New York and Boston and other Eastern cities is bought and sold at about $300 per acre. In central New York at about $100 per acre.

In Lenawee county at from thirty to fifty dollars. On the Central Rail Road from forty to sixty dollars. At White Pigeon or LaPorte from fifty to one hundred dollars, in Iowa at from thirty to fifty dollars—near Lansing at from five to twenty-five dollars.

Now the true value of land is dependant upon the interest, or per-cent which upon a fair and proper cultivation it can be made to pay per annum. Considering the safety of the investment, and the favor with which it has always been regarded by the common mind, it will always be found to bring a high price compared with its real income. It is perhaps safe to say that the majority of high priced lands do not yield five per cent per annum on the capital invested, and that while money shall not rate at above seven to ten per cent, they will ordinarily be preferred for investment at prices that can be made to yield five per cent.

This is speaking of it only as a solid basis for permanent investment. Much of the land bought and sold in the west, is uncultivated, and of course unproductive, being taken on speculation. The rise in the value of the land is the only anticipated source of profit. Now this nominal value of wild lands depends very much upon the amount of puffing and speculating connected with it, but whatever this may be, the time of course will come when it will cease, and its true value become based upon its permanent income.

It will be seen by the above schedule, that speculation has for the present put Iowa lands, for instance, very high, comparatively much higher in proportion than they will eventually bear—while severe taxation, and a reputation for unhealthiness has put the rich bottoms of Maumee at less than half their real value.

So the White Pigeon and Laporte lands, not one whit better than our rich and beautiful Lenawee County farms, and not so near the market by 100 miles and over, are rated at more than double the same value. It is universally admitted that our lands are decidedly superior to those upon the central Rail Road on the same meridian, and yet they are selling upon an average at ten dollars per acre more than ours. In fact it will be found, upon an examination of the subject, that in the whole range of lands referred to, if perhaps we except those on the Maumee, the Lenawee County Lands can be bought lower in proportion to their ultimate and real value, from ten to fifty dollars per acre, than similar farming lands, almost any where else around us.

The result of Rail Roads is, that the $300 lands of the east must come down, while good western lands such as we have all around us, must eventually come to be worth about one hundred dollars per acre and a safe reliable investment at that. Our farmers therefore who are slowly improving for themselves and families a home amid our western plains, should not undervalue the worth of that labor, or the value of the patrimony which it is their privilege thus to establish here, and eventually to bequeath as a rich legacy to their posterity. The old world affords no opportunity to the untitled and unendowed laborer to build up by independent toil, such a heritage, amid all its wide domains. It is the new world only that does, or can do this.

A SEA SALMON TAKEN AT LANSINGBURGH.—The Gazette says:

'Yesterday, (Monday) morning, about 4 o'clock, while Joe King, the renowned Lansingburgh fisherman, was fishing below the dam he caught a sea salmon weighing over twelve pounds in his net. Joe says "he made as much fuss as fifty shad." It is the first fish of the kind ever caught in this vicinity. The old creature was away from home, a stranger in a strange place, and made a great mistake when he got in Joe King's net. It was a beautiful fish, and from the anxious inspection of the crowd who formed around the lucky fisherman in front of our office, we presume each individual wished himself the possessor the speckled prize.

From the St. Louis Democrat.

The Effect of the Emancipation Movement in Missouri.

The successful inauguration of the emancipation movement in Missouri, by the election of John M. Wimar as the Mayor of St. Louis, has already borne fruit in the tremendoous rise of real estate, not only in St. Louis but throughout the entire State. It is well known to all owners and purchasers of real estate that the sales this spring have been three-fold as great, and at a greater increase of price than ever before obtained in this city. The same is true of the State. Never has there been such a demand for Missouri lands, and never before have such prices been obtained as during the present spring. Heretofore the emigration from the free States has directed itself against Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Kansas, but now much of this great tide has turned itself upon Missouri and the reason of this is undoubtebly to be found in the fact that the movement for free labor which has so recently triumphed in St. Louis and which has shown a vitality that bids fair to become victorious in the State, has drawn attention to the rich lands of Missouri, and holds out the promise that they are not long to be cursed with the incubus which has so long made them unprofitable.

There are, doubtless, other causes which have contributed to the result. The hard winters of the last two years have disgusted many with the climate of Minnesota, Wisconsin and Iowa. The publicity given to the vast mineral and agricultural resources of the State has not been without its effect. The growing prospect for the completion of our railroads has also contributed no little. But more than all of these put together, has been effected for the permanent welfare of the State, by the gallant and courageous conduct of those our citizens who have given the pledge to the entire world that here, in Missouri, the interist and welfare of free white labor should be respected and protected.

This has brought to our city, and to every county in the State, hundreds and thousands of honest and industrious free white laboring men; and it has brought, and will continue to bring, millions of dollars for investment in our lands.

We are not alone in thus thinking—many persons who opposed the movement this spring as premature, who thought it right in itself, but considered unwise to press it at this time, have since admitted to us and to others that they were mistaken, and the authors of the movement were right; that the result had more than realized all that was claimed for it—that already it had added thousands to our population and millions to our wealth.

The people of this State have come to the conclusion that there are other kinds of property in the State besides negroes—that in fact the other property in the State is worth millions for every thousand dollars of slave property—that it is silly in the extreme to sacrifice the millions for the thousands. They have also concluded notwithstanding the protests of the Republican and Leader, that white men are a much better population than negroes and that we would be better off if the negroes were removed and white men should come in to fill up the State. Indeed, it would surprise us too if the process of demonstration which has taken place here this spring should continue, to see the movement for emancipation consummated by success in one-half the time we thought it would take when it first commenced.

Committing Suicide by Hanging.

We learn by a gentleman from Erie, that a horrible affair occurred about eight miles south of that city, near Watterford, on Friday last. A German named Shultz or Shutz, living near the old Turnpike road, committed some slight misdemeanor, for which he was threatened with an arrest by the officious constable of the town. The constable even went so far as to demand $800 of Shutz, in order to settle the matter; or otherwise he would be taken "down the river," i e, to States Prison at Pittsburgh. Ignorant of the law, and of the powers and duties of the constable, and knowing the amount would absorb all of his hard-earned property, Shutz expressed the determination to his wife to die rather than go to prison or pay the money.

The matter was talked over between them, and she determined to follow his example. Having no children of their own, Shutz entrusted his money and valuables to an adopted son about fifteen years of age on the evening of Friday, saying that he and his wife were going out, and if they did not return to go and find them. The boy remained in the house all night, and in the morning they had not returned, proceeded as directed to the orchard, where the lifeless bodies of both husband and wife were found suspended by one rope to the limb of a tree. It appears that Shutz had fastened the rope first to the neck of his wife, and then climbing into the tree he passed it over a limb, adjusted it to his own neck, and then jumped downward, the movement suspending both, and causing, probably, instant strangulation. Our informant did not learn the result of the coroner's inquest. We should be loth to carry about us the leaden weight which must fill the heart of the constable who was the author of this tragedy, if indeed such brutes are susceptible to human emotions.

Recovery of the Dead Body of a Burglar, who was shot by a Young Woman—a Curious Case.

On Monday night the grocery store of P. Fingler, of York avenue, Staten Island was entered by burglars, who were discovered by a young woman who slept in the rear of the store. The burglar, on hearing her approach attempted to escape, but the young lady, with unparalleled presence of mind and bravery, caught up a loaded pistol which was hanging in the store, and fired at the retreating burglar, who finally made his escape. The lady then aroused Mr. Fingler, who slept overhead, and with his assistance closed the store. Nothing more was heard of the affair until yesterday afternoon when the body of a man was discovered floating in the bay near Clifton, it was made fast to the shore by a fisherman, and Justice Meach was notified to hold an inquest which took place immediately, when the following curious evidence was elicited:

Augustus Banks, sworn: I am a fisherman; this afternoon about two o'clock, I discovered a dead body floating in the water; I made it fast to the shore, and in doing so it turned over on its back, when I observed two holes in the right cheek; I do not know deceased.

James Long, sworn: I am a boatman; I recognize deceased as a man whom I lent a boat to Tuesday afternoon to go to Stapleton; I have not seen deceased or the boat since.

A citizen here hinted to the Justice that on account of the holes in his face, the deceased was probably the man who committed the burglary on Tuesday morning; accordingly an officer was sent after the young lady who fired at the burglar, who shortly appeared and testified as follows:

Jane Wilcox, sworn: I am a seamstress, and reside at present with Mr. Fingler, on York avenue; on Monday night last, while I was in bed, I heard a strange noise in Mr. Fingler's store; on looking through the glass door I saw a strange man in the store, I opened the door and asked who was there; I then heard retreating footsteps, when I ran into the store and seized a pistol which was kept there to frighten disorderly persons when they came there to get drinks; on seeing the man run I fired the pistol; he staggered, and then ran off; he was about 5 feet 10 inches, and was dressed in dark clothes; I don't think he had boots on; after he left I aroused Mr. Fingler, who closed the doors which had been broken open; we then went again to bed.

Dr. Silver, sworn: I have made a post mortem examination of deceased. He has been apparently in the water for two days; on the right side of his face below the jaw bone, I found a wound three inches deep; caused by a pistol ball; on the same side of the face, about an inch below the ear, was a similar wound; I should think that the wonds caused death; deceased was 5 feet 9 inches, and dressed in black clothes; he had no boots or shoes on; in one of his pockets I found a small crowbar and a key; he is about 30 years of age.

After a few minutes deliberation the Jury rendered the following verdict:

"We find that deceased came to his death from pistol-shot wounds received at the hands of Jane Wilcox, while committing a burgalry on the premises of Mr. Philip Fingler, on York avenue, on Staten Island, on the 21st day of July 1857. We also commend the noble conduct of Miss Wilcox, in defending the property of her friend at the hazard of her own life."

This case resembles very much the recent one in New York, wherein "Jack Spratt," was shot, while committing a burgalry in Broadway.—Times

A little girl was thrown off a wagon at Marshall, on Thursday of last week and so seriously injured that she died the next day.

In several southern counties of Ireland agricultural operations are greatly impeded by a scarcity of hands. The demand for labor will increase from the present time forward, and possibly prevent to a great degree, that influx of Irish agriculturists into Lancashire and Yorkshire, which has taken place every harvest for a generation.

THE BOLDEST YET.—A lady went into a store in New York recently to purchase a shawl. Just as she was handing the clerk two fifty dollar bills, she received a blow on the face from a well dressed person who exclaimed, "I forbade you buying a shawl," and snatching the money from her hand, he evaporated. The lady fainted, and on recovering, the merchant expressed surprise that her husband should have acted so ungentlemanly; but his surprise was greatly increased when the lady informed him that it was not her husband, and that she had never seen him before. The bold theif, however had made good his escape.

DROWNED.—Isaac Hunt, lately a resident of Ypsalanti, was drowned in Lake Bruen, in Washtenaw county, last week, while on a fishing excursion. He was taken with a fit while in his boat, and fell overboard.

General News.

NEW YORK, July 24.

The Canard Steamship Asia, Capt. Lott, from Liverpool, of the 11th inst., arrived at 5 o'clock this P. M. Her news had been anticipated by the Ericsson at St. Johns.

Dispatches from Constantinople state that Lord Stratford De Ratcliffe had received instructions from the Earl of Clarendon to propose a Joint Military and Judicial Administration for the Danubian principalities.

The Persians were strengthening the fortification of Herat, though by the treaty of Peace they were bound to evacuate the place.

The steamships Fulton and Kangaroo had arrived out.

LATER.—We are indebted to Capt. Lott, for the latest news by the Asia.

The Times City article says, that the unfavorable character of the monthly statement of the Bank of France, compared with the renewed fall on the Paris Bourse, cause English funds to open at a decline of 1-8. Some purchases however took place on the part of the public, and led to an improvement, which was partially maintained in the Stock Exchange.

Money was obtained in the afternoon at 5 a 5½ full supplies at the latter rate.

SWEDEN—The Swedish Chambers have voted considerable sums to be applied to the construction of Forts &c., for the national means of defence.

ENGLAND—At Oxford, Lord Monient is the opponent of Mr. Thackeray.

The Advertiser says, there will be an election for the City of London, Baron Rothchilds having pledged himself to resign in the event of the failure of the bill for the removal of Jewish disibilities.

FRANCE—The Monteur publishes an article on the elections, saying, that during eight years the number of Dissentionists instead of increasing has diminished. France, which has now judged them five times had not changed her opinions—The article, however, does not conclude, without a general warning to the press, saying that a limit must be brought to the discussion, which can now have no other object thas the useless agitation of the public feeling.

BOSOON, July 24.

Hall and Brothers, Distillery took fire this noon, from the bursting of the liquor still and was much damaged. A man named Wm. Chapman, and a little girl were badly burnt by the explosion of the still.

NEW YORK, July 24.

Hon. Hamilton Fish, and General Thomas, late Assistant Secretary of State, leave for Europe to-morrow in the Arabia.

QUEBEC, July 27.

The Canadian Steamship North America, from Liverpool, Wednesday, 15th, arrived at this port Sunday night. The Steamship Europa from Boston, 1st. arrived at Liverpool on the 11th. The Steamship Indian from Quebec the 14th, and the Khersanez from Portland, arrived at Liverpool on the 14th. The screw steamer Kangaroo left Liverpool one hour before the North America, and the Ariel. and Washington were to leave Southampton same day. Advices had been rec'd from India by the arrival of the overland mail. The mutiny among the Sepoys is represented to have spread to an alarming extent; 23 regiments of natives had joined in it. The insurgents had been defeated outside the walls of Delphi, but still held possession of the city.

Gen. Anson, the British commander-in-chief, had died of cholera. Sir Colin Campbell had started to succeed him.

The news from China contains no feature of unusual interest. Italy and Spain were tranquil.

GREAT BRITAIN.—In the House of Commons Col. Lindsay moved for the production of Secretary Marcy's letter on privateering, but Lord Palmerston said that it was not officially in the hands of the British Government, and could not be produced. After a few remarks from Lord John Russell and Sir Charles Napier the motion was withdrawn. An address to the Queen was adopted, praying for the use of all means to put down the African Slave Trade, and secure the fulfillment of the treaties. Lord Palmerston pledged the government to carry out the request. The Liverpool Chamber of Commerce gave a brilliant banquet to the officers of the Niagara.

FRANCE—The details of the recently discovered conspiracy in Paris was creeping out. Queen Victoria will visit Fontanbleau in September.

ITALY—It is alleged that Mazziue had escaped from Italy in a ship carrying the American flag.

INDIA—The fall of Delphi was looked for hourly when the Indian mail left—The loss of the Belgian army by mutiny and other causes was nearly 30,000 men. It is believed that the crisis is past—From lastest accounts there is a rumor of a panic and desertions among the insurgents at Delphi. The British Government were acting vigorously in Indian affairs, and Sir Colin Campbell left on a few hours' notice.

The Bombay money market was uneasy, and there was almost a panic.

CHINA—Hong Kong dates to the 25th May are received. The American Steam Frigate San Jacinto and the English gunboats had gone up the Canton River to attack the Junks at Foo Chow Foo. All was quiet; the rebels had been defeated there, and tea was coming down freely. Trade at Shanghai and Hong Kong was quiet. The American House of Messrs. King & Co., at Hong Kong, had suspended.

TURKEY—It is announced that the Porte had issued a protest against the occupying of Perim by the British.—Reschet Pacha had simply a personal interview with Lord Stratford DeRadcliffe on the subject.

RUSSIA—A dispatch announcing that the Russians have occupied Gaquare on the frontier of Absynia was received.

Bigland, Athawsy & Co. quote Beef advanced 1s under an active speculative inqury.

Liverpool Produce Market.—Ashes were quit at 64s for pots; Sugar, dull; Rosin, dull; Spirits Turpentine, steady; Tallow, unchanged; Coffee, firm; Rye, quiet.

London Market—The newspapers reports Sugar dull at a decline of 6da1s; Coffee quiet and all quotations slightly declined; Tea firm and active at 1s 2d a-1s 2½d; Rye dull.

Glasgow Market—Pig Iron was flat at 73s.

Liverpool market was buoyant. The newspapers report all qualities of American cotton advanced 1-16d, while Messrs Richardson, Spence & Co., quote the market firm at the rates current previous to the sailing of the Asia. The sales of the 3 days 28,000 bales. Messers. R. S. & Co., quote breadstuff market declining; flour very dull and 6d lower; wheat animated; corn declined 6d but closed firm quotations western canal quiet 30s 6d a 31s 6d; for Ohio 32sa33s; for Philad., Baltimore 31a32s; red wheat 8s 6da9s 6d; white 9s 5da10s; mixed red and yellow corn 38s 6d. The weather had been favorable for the crops. The Liverpool provision market was generally steady. Beef buoyant, pork heavy; bacon heavy and 2s lower; lard quiet.

The Birmingham market was very firm with large orders from the United States.

The London money market is active at unchanged rates.

The news from India caused a decline of Consols, which were quoted on Friday at 91a92½. A reduction on the rate of discount was expected in the Bank of England, on Thursday.

LATEST—Liverpool, July 15, 1 P M Messrs. R S. & Co., report Cotton steady. Sales about 10,000 bales; breadstuffs very quiet, and provisions unchanged.

New York, July 27.

The Steamship Illinois from Aspinwall, with California mails of the 15th inst., is coming up the Bay

ELMIRA, July 27.

Eagle Hose Co. No. 2, of Buffalo, was received here to-day by five Companies of the Elmira fire Department. No. 2, was escorted to the Brainard House, where they partook of a splendid dinner. At 8 o'clock this evening, a supper will be given the Company by the Fire Department and citizens, after which there will be a torch light procession, when No. 2 will leave for Philadelphia.

From California.

NEW YORK, July 27.

Advices from the Isthmus by the Illinois are unimportant. The frigate Roanoke was to sail from Aspinwall on the 6th.

In the Supreme Court of California, in the case of the Mercer Mining Company against John C. Freemont, had granted a perpetual injunction upon Freemont, preventing him from interfering with the operations of the Company. The Court has also reversed its late decision touching the San Francisco bonds The Court now holding as unconstitutional and void that section of the Consolidation Bill regulating the payment to the Commissioners of the fund, for the gradual extinguishing of the debt.

The Know Nothings are taking measures for the reorganization of their party in California.

Advices from Oregon of June 20, states that fears are entertained of further Indian difficulties in that Territory.

The policy of making Oregon a slave State, continues to be zealously urged.

The San Francisco markets are glutted with all kinds of produce. No demand, and prices rapidly depreciating.

Money is accumulating and rates downward.

Galego flour nominal at $13.

Pork had declined fully $7,50 per bbl for both prime and mess, sales having been made a $32,50 for mess, and $35 for clear—cash.

ISTHMUS NEWS.—The steamer Panama had arrived at Panama. She brings advices from Central America to the 4th inst. W. C. McCracken American Consul at Tammau, died on board the Panama at Port Arenas.

The Chilian Minister Plenipotentiary had arrived at San Jose with proposals for the contemplated Spanish American confederation.

MOFFAT'S LIFE PILLS AND PHOENIX BITTERS

In all liver complaints, bilious diseases, acidity of the stomach, and for indigestion and all its frightful exhibitions, these medicines act in brief space and will effect a radical cure.

Sold by W. B Moffat, 335 Broadway, N. Y. Taylor & Curtis Agents, Tecumseh.

THE PILL TRADE. Who could dream of the magnitude such an undertaking as the manufacture of a Purgative Pill assumes when it comes into general use. And how painfully do the following numbers speak of the amount of human sickness and suffering, that is the harvest of a remedy goes forth to combat and subdue. Dr. J. C. Ayer of Lowell, manufactures in his laboratory forty gross per day of his Cathartic Pills, through all the year. This is, eight boxes a minute or one dose a second. We thus find over 43,000 persons swallow this pill every day, or 1,206,000 a month! Physicians, think of this! think of patients a day who seek relief from the medical skill of one man. Surely that man should be, as he is in this case one of the first intelligence and of the highest character. His occupation entails upon him a fearful responsibility for the weal or woe of his fellow men. Painsville Courier.—For Sale by Taylor & Curtis, Tecumseh.

If all our readers who are troubled with Liver Complaint, Jaundice or Dyspepsia, will read the advertisement in another column of Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, and then do as we have done—get a bottle, we should not see so many sickly, half dead, despering people as now meet our gaze at almost every corner, for there never was a remedy of which so much is said, and that performs so near what its proprietors say it will do. It cost us so highly recommended that we were not fail to try it, and a trial has convinced us without a doubt, that it is the best family medicine in use. We take it for Headache, Sour Stomach, Billiousness, and any of the little bodily ills that are common, and it has produced a pleasant state of feeling to those and what is better after using it a few days these little ills grow less and less, and we by a continuance in the use of the Invigorator, have a prospect of being entirely free from them. Now we wish to impress our readers with this, that the invigorator is a medicine particularly adapted to family use, and where there are children subject to Bilious attacks as all children are, it is invaluable, saving physicians' bills, and an untold amount of anguish both to mothers and their little ones.

ILLUSTATED.

GREAT inducements for Clubs. Messers G. P. Putnam & Co., having now published the first volume of the Illustrated Edition of Irving's life of Washington being the compete life of Washington before the Revolution, are ready to furnish the same to subscribers free of postage on the receipt of $3,50. Single numbers sent post paid to any part of the Union on the receipt of 25 cts.

The following are the inducements offered to clubs desiring to subscribe to this magnificent and national publication. Any person remitting four subscriptions for the first volume comprising 14 numbers will be entitled to five complete sets delivered free of postage.—Clubs of six remitting $21 will be entitled to two extra copies of the volume or an extra copy of any other of Putnam & Co's. publications of equal value. Clubs of twelve remitting $42 will be entitled to four extra copies or an extra copy and a complete set of Addison's work, in six volumes; delivered free of postage. The same premiums will be given for a like number of subscriptions to the succeeding volumes. Each number of the Illustrated Washington will contain one, and every other number two first class steel Engravings or Maps. In addition to the steel engravings, the work contains a numerous elegant Wood engravings, illustrative of historical subjects.

CAUTION.—Persons subscribing for the life of Washington should be particular to obtain the only work which must forever remain the standard authority. Irving's life of Washington bears the imprint of G. P. Putnam & Co., the only publishers of Irving's Works.

"Every American should put this work side by side with his Bible on his book shelf. Let your children read it, and learn by the example of the Great Washington, the lessons of patriotism, moral courage, perseverance under difficulties, which the history of his life affords. We know of no American work which we had rather own than this; it is worth a thousand of the trashy publications which the press are daily sending forth.—[Scientific American.

Agricultural Ode.

BY WM. C. BRYANT.

Far back in ages
The plow with wreaths was crowned,
The hands of kings and sages
Entwined the chaplet round,
Till men of spoil
Disdained the toil
By which the world was nourished,
And blood and pillage were the soil
In which their laurels flourished;
Now the world her fault despairs—
The guilt that stains her glory,
And weeps her crimes amid the cares
That formed her earliest glory.

The throne shall crumble,
The diadem shall wane,
The tribes of earth shall humble
The pride of those who reign,
And war shall lay
His pomp away;
The fame that heroes cherish,
The glory earned in deadly fray
Shall fade, decay and perish;
Honor waits o'er all the earth,
Through endless generations—
The art that calls the harvest forth,
And feeds the expectant nations

From Moores Rural New Yorker.

Bee Keeping—Construction of Hives.

MESSRS. EDS;—In a recent number of the RURAL, "A Constant Reader" says he would like to inquire of me my mode of treatment in wintering a stock of bees."

In reply to the above I will state, that with differently constructed hives my mode of treatment varies somewhat, though the all important objects to be attained, are a dry location and thorough ventilation at the top of the hives, as well as the bottom; so as to afford means for the vapor to escape that is produced by the breath of the bees. This moisture produces frost in the hive in severe cold weather, and causes the bees to freeze, but keep them dry and the most severe cold weather that we have will not injure them materially.

With the square box hives, my mode of treatment is as follows.—In the top of each hive I have five 1 1 2 inch auger holes, for ventilation, having one near each corner and one at the center. During winter, I placed a box bottom up on the top of the hive, to confine the bees & afford an air chamber to receive the moisture from the hive. In addition to this I raise the hive on strips one and a half inches square, placed around under the edges of the hive. These I slit across with a hand saw every half inch or so, from the upper side, to within ¼ inch of the lower edge; these slits admit air exclude mice, spiders, &c., and will not become closed up with the dead bees and filth that accumulates in the hive during the winter. The hive being raised one and ½ inches from the bottom board, the air circulates freely under the combs and preserves them dry and healthy.

In all hives having a chamber for small boxes, I remove the boxes in the fall, and leave the communications open into the chambers, and afford some means of ventilation at the bottom.

Many bee-keepers are of the opinion that the cause of bees perishing during the winter (with a supply of honey in store is on account of their becoming so chilled and torpid they are unable to move from one part of the hive to the other and consequently starve, while there is abundance in the hive. This I am confident is not the cause, only in such hives as are not sufficiently ventilated, for as long as the bees and comb remain dry, they will be able to move to all parts of the hive, and even to fly several feet from the hive when the mercury is down to 20° below zero.

I have frequently examined my hives during coldest days of the three past winters, and I have never found them so 'chilled' or "torpid" but that if sufficiently disturbed, they were able to fly several feet in the cold air.

If "A Constant Reader" had examined his hives (in which the bees died with honey in store,) before they thawed out, he would have found the combs covered with frost and ice, and the bees all frozen in a mass. The frost first accumulates at the top and outer edges of the combs, and as the cold continues, it increases and gath-ers nearer and nearer the center of the hive, until it reaches the bees when they instantly perish. But when a thaw occurs every week or two, the frost melts from the combs—and the bees survive the winter. It is the continual cold weather for several weeks in succession that destroys our bees in the common hives.

I would also state that from repeated tests during fifteen winters past, I have become convinced that bees will winter in a building, on less honey, with much more safety, and be more healthy and strong in the spring, than when wintered out of doors and exposed to all the changes of the weather. I winter them in my "Combination Hive," in my dwelling—in my shop, and in any out building that will afford them protection from the cold and storms. I wintered one colony the past winter, in the best possible condition in C. M. Saxton's Bookstore 140 Fulton St. N. Y. The hive stands at a rear window with a spout out for the ingress and egress of the bees, in the same position it occupied last season where the bees stored over 60 lbs. of superior honey, which commanded from 31 to 37½ cents per lb., in boxes of 4 to 8 lbs. each. I use only a few of the common hives, (and these for variety sake, and compare their merits with others;) as they require more attention and with me, they will not produce one half the amount of surplus honey that I can get from the other hives. E. W. PHELPS.

Elizabeth, N. J.

Jefferson's Opinion of Farming.

Whatever may be your choice of future occupation—whatever calling or profession you may select, there is none more honorable than the farmer. The patriarch of the field, as he sits beside his cottage door, when his daily toil is over, feels an inward joy never known in the halls of pride.—His labor yields him unpurchasable health and repose. I have observed with more grief and pain than I can express, the visible tokens which appear in all directions of a growing disposition to avoid agricultural pursuits and to rush into some over-crowded profession, because a corrupt and debasing fashion has thrown around it the tinsel of imaginary respectability. Hence, the farmer, instead of preparing his child to follow in the path of usefulness himself has trod, educates him for a sloth; labor is considered vulgar; to work is ungenteel; a jackplane is less respectable than a lawyer's green bag; the handles of the plow less dignified than the yard stick. Unfortunate infatuation! How melancholy is this delusion, which, unless it be checked by a wholesome reform in public opinion, will cover our whole country with wreck and ruin? This state of things is striking at the very foundation of our national greatness it is upon agricultur that we mainly depend for our continued prosperity, and dark and evil will be the day when it falls into disrepute. What other pursuit offers so sure a guarantee of an honest indepence, a comfortable support for a dependant family?—Where else can we look but to the productions of the soil for the safety of investment, and for ample returns? In commercial speculations all is chance and uncertainty, changes and fluctuations rise and fall. In the learned professions scarce one in ten makes enough to meet his incidental expense how then, are we to account for the misdirection of public opinion.

HOSPITALITY.—O, excellent wife! encumber not yourself and me to get a curiously rich dinner, for this man or woman, who has alighted at our gate, nor a bed chamber made at too great a cost. These things if they are curious in them, they can get for a few shillings in any village; but rather let the stranger see, if he will in your looks, accent and behavior, your heart and earnestness, your thought and will, which he cannot buy at any price in any city and which he may well travel twenty miles, and dine sparingly and sleep to behold. Let me the emphasis of hospitality lie in bed and board; but let truth, and love and honor, and courtesy flow in all thy deeds.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

AYER'S
CHERRY
PECTORAL,
FOR THE RAPID CURE OF
Colds, Coughs, and Hoarseness.

HAMPTON, MASS. 20th Dec., 1856.
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.—Your Cherry Pectoral has been the best remedy I have found for the Coughs, Hoarseness, Influenza, and other consumptive symptoms of a Cold, in my family. Cherry Pectoral. Its constant use in my practice and my family for the last ten years has shown it to possess unparalleled virtues for the treatment of these complaints. ESEK KNIGHT, M.D.

A. B. MORTLEY, Esq., of Troy, N. Y., writes: I have used your Pectoral myself, and in my family ever since you introduced it, and believe it the best medicine for its purpose ever put out. With a bad cold I should scorn to pay twenty-five dollars for a bottle that do without it, or take anything else.

Croup, Whooping Cough, Influenza.
SPRINGFIELD, MASS., Feb. 7, 1856.
BROTHER AYER: I will cheerfully certify your PECTORAL is the best remedy we possess for the cure of Whooping Cough, Croup, and the chief diseases of children. We of your fraternity in the South appreciate your skill, and commend your medicine to our people.

HIRAM CONKLIN, M. D.

AMOS LEE, Esq., MONTEREY, Ia., writes, 27 JAN., 1856: "I had a tedious Influenza, which confined me in doors six weeks; took many medicines without relief; finally tried your PECTORAL by the advice of our clergyman. The first dose relieved the soreness in my throat and lungs; less than one half the bottle made me completely well. Your medicines are the cheapest as well as the best we can buy, and we esteem you, Doctor, and your remedies, as the poor man's friend."

Asthma or Phthisic, and Bronchitis.
WEST MANCHESTER, PA., Feb. 4, 1856.
SIR: YOUR CHERRY PECTORAL is performing marvellous cures in this section. It has relieved several from alarming symptoms of consumption, and is now curing a man who has labored under an affection of the lungs for the last forty years. HENRY L. PARRY, Merchant.

A. A. RAMSEY, M. D., AKRON, MUSKEGON Co., Iowa, writes, Sept. 6, 1854: "During my practice of many years I have found nothing equal to your CHERRY PECTORAL for giving ease and relief to consumptive patients, or curing such as are curable."

We might add volumes of evidence, but the most convincing proof of the virtues of this remedy is found in its effects upon trial.

Consumption.
Probably no one remedy has ever been known which cured so many fatal such dangerous cases as this. Some no human aid can reach; but even to those the CHERRY PECTORAL affords relief and comfort.

ASTOR HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY, March 5, 1856.
DOCTOR AYER, LOWELL: I feel it a duty and a pleasure to inform you what your CHERRY PECTORAL has done for my wife. She had been five months laboring under the dangerous symptoms of Consumption, from which no aid we could procure gave her much relief. She was steadily failing, until Dr. Strong, of this city, where we have come for advice, recommended a trial of your medicine. We bless his kindness, as we do your skill, for she has recovered from that day. She is not yet as strong as she used to be, but is free from her cough, and calls herself well.

Yours with gratitude and regard,
ORLANDO SHELBY, of SHELBYVILLE.

Consumptives, do not despair till you have tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It is made by one of the best medical chemists in the world, and its cures all around us bespeak the high merits of its virtues.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

THE sciences of Chemistry and Medicine have been taxed their utmost to produce this best, most perfect purgative which is known to man. Innumerable proofs are shown that these PILLS have virtues which surpass in excellence the ordinary medicines, and that they win decidedly upon the esteem of all sorts. They are safe and pleasant to take, but powerful to cure. Their penetrating properties stimulate the vital activities of the body, remove the obstructions of its organs, purify the blood, and expel disease. They purge out the foul humors which breed and grow distemper, stimulate sluggish or disordered organs into their natural action, and impart healthy tone with strength to the whole system. Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of every body, but they cure the every-day complaints of every body, but they cure formidable and dangerous diseases that have baffled also formidable and dangerous diseases that have baffled the best of human skill. While they produce powerful effects, they are at the same time, in diminished doses, the safest and best physic that can be employed for children. Being sugar-coated, they are pleasant to take; and being purely vegetable, are free from any risk of harm. Cures have been made which surpass belief were they not substantiated by men of such exalted position and character as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Many eminent clergymen and physicians have lent their names to certify to the public the reliability of my remedies, while others have sent me the assurance of their conviction that my Preparations contribute immensely to the relief of any afflicted, suffering fellow-men.

The Agent below named is pleased to furnish gratis my American Almanac, containing directions for their use and certificates of their cures, of the following complaints:—

Costiveness, Bilious Complaints, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Heartburn, Headache arising from a Foul Stomach, Nausea, Indigestion, Morbid Inaction of the Bowels and Pain arising therefrom, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, all Disorders and Cutaneous Diseases which require an evacuant Medicine, Scrofula or King's Evil, Tetter and Salt-rheum, Erysipelas, Blotches and Eruptions, Pimples on the Face, Tumors, Ringworm, Scald Head, and Ulcerations, all of which yield to the blood and skin purifying properties of these Pills, and take nothing else. No other they can give you compares with this in its intrinsic value or curative powers. The sick want the best and there is for them, and they should have it.

Patent Medicines.

A Medicine that Never Debilitates.

DR. SANFORD'S
INVIGORATOR,
OR LIVER REMEDY.

HAS ALL THE GOOD QUALITIES OF A Purgative medicine, answering the purposes of any Cathartic without the debilitating effects experienced from most purgatives. It acts slowly and gently, but surely, moving the bowels to carry off all the secreted matter, at the same time, stimulating the Liver to a proper performance of its functions.

The Invigorator cures the Sick Headache. Take one or two tea-spoonsful at each attack and it will soon disappear. For an overloaded stomache, or when food rises or sours, take the Invigorator after eating, and it will not prove disagreeable or oppressive. For Heartburn, Palpitation, or difficult breathing take a teaspoonful once or twice daily. For Loss of Appetite, Langu or Listlessness, the medicine is invaluable It will restore the appetite and make the food digest well.—Nightmare take a teaspoonful on retiring, and the demons of dream-land will all be fairies. After eating a heavy dinner, take a dose of Invigorator and it will relieve all oppression or fullness. The Invigorator is a Liver Remedy of unequalled virtue, acting directly on that organ, curing Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, Dysentery, Piles Worms, and all Female Obstructions, for which it has no equal.

We know there is nothing now before the American public, prepared with such skill by a scientific man, particularly for diseases of the Liver, as Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver Remedy. It has attained a reputation second to no other article in the world, simply because it rests on its own merit. To convince all by trial that it is all its proprietors claim it to be, if any of our readers are suffering from such diseases as are described in Dr. Sanford's advertisement, we know of no remedy that will so surely cure as the Invigorator.

There has lately been brought to our notice a medicine that seems to possess wonderful, curative and healing proprieties in diseases of the Liver, stomache and Digestive Organs. It came to us with so many testimonials in its favor that we have noted its effects in some of the worst cases of continual debility, caused by deranged liver, and in every instance the effect was to relieve or give a permanent cure, Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver remedy is what we refer to. We always have been credulous about cures by patent medicines, but we are convinced that this medicine, for family use, is not over rated by the host of recommendations it has. Our advice is, for all troubled with Indigestion, Debility or Bowel Complaint, to get a bottle and try it; our word for it, relief will be experienced.

BLESSINGS To The Invalids who use Dr Sanford's Invigorator, for it will relieve them of their pains as soon as it is taken into their stomach. Pain and misery cannot exist where the Invigorator is used, for it will as surely drive them away, as daylight will banish darkness, of this there can be no doubt to those who try it, for it carries conviction with every dose taken. Another evidence is the thousands of certificates from those who use it or have been cured by it.—Try one bottle, if it does not benefit, then we are mistaken

HEALTH OR SICKNESS.
CHOOSE BETWEEN THEM.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

The blood furnishes the material of every tone, muscle, gland and fibre in the human frame. When pure it decrees health to every organ; when corrupt, it necessarily produces disease. Holloway's Pills operate directly upon the elements of the stream of life, neutralizing the principle of disease, and thus radically curing the malady, whether located in the nerves, the stomach, the liver, the bowels, the muscles, the skin, the brain, or any other part of the system.

USED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

Holloway's Pills are equally efficacious in complaints common to the whole human race, and in disorders peculiar to certain climates and localities.

ALARMING DISORDERS.

Dyspepsia and derangement of the liver, the source of infirmity and suffering, and the cause of innumerable deaths, yield to these curatives. In all cases, how ble deaths, yield to these curatives. In all cases, how ever, regular purgatives, alterative or purgatives as a mild purgative, alterative and tonic; they relieve the bowels, purify the fluids, and invigorate the system and the constitution at the same time.

General Weakness—Nervous Complaints.

When all stimulants fail, the renovating and bracing properties of these Pills give firmness to the shaking nerves and enfeebled muscles of the victim of general debility.

DELICATE FEMALES.

All irregularities and ailments incident to the delicate and sensitive organs of the sex are removed or prevented by a few doses of these mild but infallible alteratives. No mother who regards her own or her children's health should fail to have them within her reach.

The London "Lancet," the London "Medical Review," and the most eminent of the faculty in Great Britain, France and Germany, have eulogized the Pills and their inventor.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy known in the World for the following Diseases

Asthma,	Diarrhœa	Inflamation	Stone and
Bowel Complaints	Dropsy	Inward weak	Gravel,
Colds	Debility	ness	Secondary
Coughs	Fevers	Liver Complaints	Symptoms

I have tried during Nineteen Years of my life the various modes of doing business.

Firstly for Cash.
Secondly on Short Credit.
Thirdly, had to take Long Credit, Orders and Accounts.

Lastly, I have been compelled to wait for payment of Goods sold on Six Months time, long enough for a man to visit California, get rich, and return, before payment could be forced or coaxed.

Now I wish to say, to my numerous friends and patrons, that I am thoroughly convinced that the mode of buying goods on time is both injurious to the buyer and seller.

I will hereafter Sell for Ready pay, at such prices that will defy all competion in this Town, State, or the United States.

No one should buy a dollars worth of Goods without calling at the

LILIAS DAY.

It was a bright afternoon in early June some thirteen years ago. The hills that rise all along the "Valley of the Naugatuck," had folded the green surplices of of summer over their gray bosoms, and the blue river gathered in between them, answering back the serene smile of the afternoon sky, forming altogether one of those grand country poems that Nature loves to write out in New England.

A few rods from the river, in a green opening among the hills, stood a small one-story cottage, almost wrapped up in the honeysuckles and morning glories that grew all around the front, and reached up to the low eaves.

A little distance from the house, and just to the left of the main road, stood a large cherry tree, its long, green arms cut out very beautifully against the sky; and if you had been sauntering up the road on the afternoon of which I write, and, if your eyes had chanced to light on that tree, you would have turned about, and stealing softly under the low branches, have stood there, your soul luxuriating (if beauty is to you a luxury) in the vision revealed to you.

She was lying under the tree, one little bare arm folded under her head, and her soft cheek half turned to the cool grass, that sweet child, with hardly the bloom of eight summers on her young dreaming face. The long, golden-brown lashes were drooped over her blue eyes, and over her small crimson lips the smiles wandered like shifting light, betraying the dimples hidden just in the smooth curving of either cheek. Her bright hair lay tangled about her face, and the little fingers that were braided in a half-finished wreath of buttercups and white clover blossoms, told their story as plainly as the lips above them could have done this—The child had been in the woods gathering flowers, and when she sat down under the cool shadows of the cherry-tree to weave them into a wreath, she had grown weary, and gone to sleep with her small fingers fastened over the long stems.

But there were no travellers on the main road that afternoon, so the child slept on, with no body to watch her, unless it was the sunshine that found a passage among the branches, and dropped a golden baptismal upon the childs forehead. At last, however, a small dog bounded through the half-open gate of the little cottage and rushing to the sleeping child, commenced licking her face and hands with unmistable demonstrations of joy.

"Why, Fido, what in the world made me go to sleep?" The girl had awakened now; and after rubbing her eyes, she sat up. "You're a dear old fellow, to wake me up, any way," and she flung her arms around the neck of the dog.

The next moment, a large stone had dropped to the girl's feet, and with a quick, sharp yell of pain, Fido had sprung up from her arms.

The girl was on her feet in a moment, looking oft eagerly to the road, where, standing nearly opposite her, she saw the offender. He was a boy, hardly more than two years her senior, and those blue eyes of hers had never lighted upon a more wretched, destitute-looking object than the one before her. His long tangled hair had apparently never enjoyed an acquaintance with comb or brush; while the ragged, rimless article set on one side of his head might once have rejoiced in the cognomen of hat. His elbows both protruded from the sleeves of a thread-bare coat, and the pants that terminated some three inches above his bare feet, were patched with such a variety of colors, it would have been difficult to determine their original shade.

The boy's face was thin and pale, and told a sorrowful story of want and suffering. Yet there was something in the large, dark eyes, that beamed out bright and wild from between those masses of tangled hair, which redeemed the expression of the whole face. There was so much courage and earnestness in them; and though they might flash with anger, you felt they might melt with tenderness, too.

"Oh, how could you, boy!" said the little girl, turning her soft eyes from the boy to the moaning dog. "Don't you see you've hurt Fido?"

"Well, I don't care if I have; I'll hurt him again, too," was the coarse rejoinder, as the boy bent down and picked up another stone.

The little girl bounded across the grass, and was by his side in a moment. "No, no," she said, laying her hand on his arm, and lifting her sweet face, full of earnestness, to his. "You won't throw it, please don't. You don't know how much I love him; I and grandma, too—oh, you won't; will you?"

He looked in her face a moment, very earnestly. Then a softer expression came into those wild eyes, and the next moment the stone rolled down the hill, and was gathered into the deep heart of the river.

"Oh, thank you, thank you a great many times, little boy," said the girl with intuitive grace. "Fido will thank you too. Hush, Fido," for the dog had limped to her side, and was surveying the boy, with an occasional low growl, which indicated anything but gratitude.

"Little girl," said the boy, awkwardly twisting his brown fingers together, "I'm sorry I threw that stone, now; I shouldn't if I'd known you."

"Oh, well don't mind it now, Fido's got over it, you see; and you won't ever again hurt a dog, will you?"

"Yes, I shall, though; I'll hurt every dog but yours that I can find, for I hate everybody and everything in the world—everbody but you, I mean." His thin lips quivered as he said the words and his dark eyes flashed like the quick lightening out of a summer night cloud, but the sudden softnes that came over them was wonderously touching as he finished the sentence and looked up in the girl's face.

"Oh, don't say so," said the child, earnestly, almost solemnly. "It's very wicked—grandma says we must love everybody."

"She wouldn't love me, though, I guess," and the speaker glanced down contemptuously at the tout ensemble of his coat an' pants; "a dirty, ragged, good-for-nothing little ape, fit only for the gallows; that's what the man up the road called me just now. It made me mad, though it's true enough I s'pose. Don't you see nobody'd love me?"

"No,"—her brown curls waved brightly in the sunshine, as the little girl shook her head—"grandma says it don't make any difference what kind of clothes we wear, so our heart is in the right place."

The boy looked at her a moment, half in doubt, half in wonder. "Little girl, what's your name?" was the audible conclusion of his cogitations. It was evident that his practical knowledge of humanity had furnished him with a code of morals very unlike those advanced by his gentle companion.

"Lilias Day; and I live all alone with grandma, in that little cottage between the hills. But it's warm, standing here in the sunshine, won't you come and sit under the tree, where it's cool?"

"Yes, for I like you, Lilias, you see; I want to talk some more—beside that I'm very tired."

"Have you walked a great ways to-day?" questioned Lilias, as the two children threw themselves on the cool grass, and the great tree locked its long arms above them, like the blessing of a choir of angels.

"Yes, I've walked from a place called Waterbury, since morning."

"From Waterbury!" repeated the little girl, her blue eyes growing larger with astonishment. "Why, its such a long, long way, I've heard grandma say. Where are you going, little boy?"

"I'm going to New York. You see, Lilias, I've run away."

Unconciously the child drew farther from him, but as he continued, she came closer again, and her sweet face grew very full of mournful sympathy, as she listened to the boy's story.

"My name is Arthur Hale," he said, "and I've lived all alone with old Jack Thomas, since mamma died, four years ago last Spring, and all this time, Jack has done nothing but make me work from sunrise to sunset, and cursed and beat me every time I didn't please him, and not given me enough to eat, and only these old clothes you see. Well, last Saturday, he gave me a worse beating than ever, because I didn't understand something he told me to do, and I just said to myself, 'Arthur Hale, you're a fool if you'll stand this any longer. Just run away, and go to New York, as Sam Parsons did; you can't be any worse off than you are now, and may be some time you'll get money enough to go to Georgia, where your mother said that rich uncle of yours lived, that she named you after.' So, Monday morning, I watched for the first line of light that used always to creep up a chink in the wall, and then I crept out of bed softly, and in a few minutes I was out of the house, I didn't stop running till my breath left me, you believe; and since Monday, I've walked from Massachusetts here, and I shall keep on till I get to New York."

"And what will you do there, Arthur?" questioned Lilias Day, and her tones were full of sympathy.

"I don't know—something or other, I guess—at any rate, it will be better than living with old Jack Thomas," and the boy drew up his ragged sleeve, and enforced the truth of his remark by a sight which sent a shiver of horror through the little girl's frame, for the small arms were terribly scarred by the recent whippings he had undergone. "But, Lilias, I want you to call me 'Arty, my darling boy!' then her little white fingers would drop down so soft and cool in my hair, and her great beautiful eyes would look on me so full of love. Oh, dear! I've felt many a night her lips on my forehead, just as they used to be; and then I've waked up and found myself in that old, dark garret, and remembered that mamma was lying under the long, tangled grass in the graveyard, and I've wished I was there, too. She was such a beautiful mother, and she loved me so dearly—and I loved her, too; and I can see the sweet smile lying about her lips, just as plain as I see you now, Lilias—there don't cry. Why, did you ever! I'm crying too!"

"Lily! Lily, darling; where are you?" The wind brought the words to the ears of the children, as they sat under the tree, and the little girl was on her feet in a moment. 'It's grandma,' she said—'she's calling me, Arty—won't you go with me?'

She was standing in the front door, looking somewhere on the hither side of fifty, and she seemed to realize fully one's ideal of an old lady, calm and placid, set like a picture in the green framework of the vine around her front door. The snowy cap was pinned closely as a Quakers under her slightly wrinkled chin, and the black silk kerchief folded neatly over her calico dress. There was something, too, in her mild, motherly face, that would have made a poor, friendless, homeless boy, like Arthur, warm towards it.—Those lips would never drop anything but kindness for any human being.

"Why, sakes alive! who have you got with you?" ejaculated the old lady, as her wondering eyes fell upon Arthur.

'It's Arthur Hale, grandma, who hasn't got anybody to take care of him, for his mother died a long, long while ago, and he's run away from a dreadful man, who used to beat him every day, for just nothing at all.'

The little girl's epitome of Arthur's sad story was delivered in a tone which greatly heighted its effect.

'Dear me! dear me!' repeated the old lady, and there was a suspicious twinkling of the eyes under her white cap; 'come right into the house, both of you. What a dreadful plight you are in, poor child; and no mother to take care of you,' she continued, surveying the boy with mingled pity and pain—for her New England love of neatness was greatly shocked at his filthy garments. 'Lily, take the poor child into the shed, and show him where to was his face, as clean as soap and water can make it, while I get him something to eat.'

The beams of the dying June day looked into the kitchen of that little vine-wrapped cottage, and on the two children as they sat before Mrs. Day's bountifully furnished table, while the good woman stood surveying them, her face radient with satisfaction. Arthur's in whose personelle an entire metamorphosis had been effected by the duly chronicled soap and water, and a large check apron, which kindly concealed all the deficiencies beneath it, looked almost beautiful, with those bright, large eyes, soft and clear as twin summer stars, as they travelled from the old lady's tranquil features of those of her beautiful grandchild.

'And now, children, you may go out and play till the stars come over the hills; for of course Arthur won't think of leaving us to-night; and I'll see if I can't muster up some better clothes for him.'

It was long past the good woman's hour for retiring, but her fingers indicated no weariness, as she sat before her little round stand, busily plying her needle, while a varity of half-worn articles of clothing were scattered about her.

'That old coat of poor William's will answer nicely if I can manage to take up the seams a little; and that straw hat's as good as new,' murmured the old lady to herself. 'Those pants, too, they want a new hem, and it would take a tailor to say they wasn't bought yesterday.' And between the golden night stars the angels looked down and saw the old woman at her labor of love.

It was morning again, and the valley was 'glad at his presence,' and the south wind gathered up the grass of the meadows into long green breakers, and tore them playfully apart.

Arthur Hale and Lilias Day were walking slowly toward an angle of the road, some half a mile from the house of the latter. A silence very like that of sadness had come over the two children as they drew near the place where their paths must diverge. It was at last broken by Arthur.

'I have been thinking, Lily, of what Jack Thomas would say if he could see me now in these beautiful new clothes; I guess he'd think I was some.'

'I shouldn't know you, Arty, you look so different from what you did yesterday—oh, dear! here we are at the corner, where grandma said I must stop. We shan't see each other any more.'

'Yes, we shall, too,' said the boy, with an earnestness that seemed almost prophetic; 'I shall come back to you some day, Lily Day, as true as I live—it may be a long time, but I shall come back.'

'Well, Arty, I believe you,' said the girl, her blue eyes catching some of the light in her companion's. 'Here is my bead purse, and it's got three dollars grandma put in it. She said I might give it to you, Arty. You'll keep it to remember me by, won't you?'

He took it and held it up so that the bead sparkled brightly in the sunshine.—'Yes, Lily,' he said, 'and when I come back I shall bring you something, too. I'll keep the purse till then.'

'Well, good bye, Arty'—her eyes were growing dim with tears—'don't forget, now, what grandma said about not walking farther than Derby, and then taking the stage to New Haven.'

'No, I shan't forget. Good bye Lily;' he wrapped his arms about her neck just as years ago he wrapped them about his mother's and pressed his mother's and pressed his lips again and again to the fair, sweet forehead. Then, without speaking another word, for his cheeks were moist with tears, he passed on, and Lilias stood at the corner of the road and watched him with her dim eyes till he was out of sight.

And so on the bright June morning those children have parted. Will their life-paths ever meet again? It was a question which neither priest, or poet, or philosopher could have answered—known only to Him who taketh not counsel of any, and holds in His right hand the thread of all human destinies.

Sweet Lilias Day! Those eleven years had well fulfilled the promise of her childhood. The fair, delicately chisled features, the May-blue eyes, and the plaits of the rich, shining hair, formed altogeth er an exquisite Madonna picture, and yet there was a little pensiveness about the crimson lips which made you feel, somehow, that the girl's feet had come up through some dark shadows to the nineteenth winter of her life.

You would hardly have recognized Mrs. Day, those eleven years had so changed her whole appearance. Her dark hair was now white as December frosts, and it must have required a long experience of physical infirmity to have shrivelled those once plump cheeks, and furrowed so deeply that placid forehead, around which the light of the tallow candle dimly flickers, as she lifts her head from the pillow and answers her grandchild—'Lily, darling, do not speak of that again; it most breaks my heart to hear you.'

'But grandma'—the young girl's voice is low soft, albeit there is a little quiver of sadness running through it—'you see now our cottage is gone, and the money is all spent, it is the only way we can live. It will be very hard to leave you, I know'. Here her soft fingers were wrapped closely in the old woman's wrinkled ones. 'But it is all we can do—and then I will come home every two weeks, you know. Besides that, I have learned from you that nothing can degrade us, unless we degrade ourselves, and after all you have done for me, it is but right that now, in your helpless old age, I should take your place; don't you see, gradma? They have advertised for girls in one of the Waterbury factorys, and you will not say no to my going next week.'

The old lady laid back on her pillow and the tears fell fast down her wrinkled cheeks, and the young girl struggled heroically to swallow down the great sobs that were heaving her heart.

'My darling, my pet,' said the old woman, lifting up her arms and drawing the golden head to her bosom, 'how can I let you go? How I shall long for a sight of your blue eyes and your bright smile during the long, lonely days, and when the night drops down, I shall listen for your step and the sound of your sweet voice, and then I shall think of you there, tired and sad, among strangers, who can never feel or care for you.'

'But Grandma,' Lilias whispered the words amid thickly falling tears, 'you know God will be there, and He can take care of me.'

'I know it—I know it;' the dim eyes of the old woman kindled with new light—'Oh! remember thy covenant with the fatherless and the widow, and keep her young feet when they go out from her home.'

And in answer to the old woman's prayer came a hush of blessed peace and love to her heart, and that of her grandchild.

Two weeks had passed. A young Southern gentleman, traveling with two of his friends through a section of New England, and being in the vicinity of Waterbury, he had visited the city for the sole purpose of having ocular demonstration of the power and extent of her far-famed manufacturing resources.

Such was the brief statement furnished by the trio of strangers to one of the proprietors of a large factory, who courteously volunteered to pioneer the gentlemen through the immense building. The strangers had gazed with mingled astonishment and admiration on the vast and complicated machinery displayed in the lower rooms and they had now assended to an upper apartment, where a large number of females were employed. 'Well, it will be sometime before we see anything like this on our Georgia plantations—eh, Hale?' said one of the gentlemen, after his eyes had journeyed down the row of girls on either side of the room, as he turned to his friend. But the gentleman thus addressed did not respond to the inquiry, for at that moment his eyes lighted upon a face, which until that moment had been turned from him. A sudden change came over the fine features of the young Southerner, and his dark, lustrous eyes fastened on that sweet face with a watched him with her dim eyes till he was out of sight. look of intense eagerness.

'She is beautiful as an Italian picture, isn't she?' said his friend, following the young man's glance. 'She would grace any of our drawing rooms; but see here, Hale, 'twon't do to stare at her like that.'

'Can you tell me, sir, the name of that young girl,—she with the golden hair and blue eyes I mean?' asked in a low voice the young Southerner of urbane proprietor, as they stood together in a corner of the room.

'Let's see, Lilias Day I believe she gave it. Pretty, is she not? She has been here but a very short time. I heard something of her history the other day. She resides twenty miles below here with h grandmother; the family were once quite wealthy, but have become greatly reduced. Gentlemen, will you walk into this room?'

That noon, as Lilias Day was leaving the factory, a note was placed in her hands by the foreman, who said he had been requested to deliver it to her.

Greatly surprised and yet her heart filled with terrible forebodings for her grand mother, she stepped to the window, and opened it. A small note drifted to the floor, but the words in an unknown hand first arrested her attention:

'LILIAS DAY:—Put up your work and go home to your grandmother. Take this and use it freely, and fear no more for the future, for while I live neither of you shall ever suffer.

A FRIEND.'

Lilias' blue eyes were flooded with amazement, as, after traversing several times these lines, she lifted them from the paper. She raised the note at her feet. It was a check for two hundred dollars.

'Ah! there goes the afternoon train In two days it will bring Lilias back,' murmured old Mrs. Day to herself, as she walked painfully to the window, and looked down on the long train of cars as they swept through the landscape, and it seemed to the old woman's eyes like the flight of some evil spirit with the lurid flames pouring out of its nostrils, and the great skirts of smoke lying in its wake, as it glided every day to and fro, breaking into the hush of the quiet valley. A few moments later, and the bed-room door was opened quickly, and Lilias hung upon the old woman's neck.

'Oh, grandma! I have come back to you, never to go away again. We shall be happy, too, for we have such a friend. And—and—' she could not consummate the sentence for the tears that were washing her cheeks.

It was the afternoon of the day after Lilias' return. There was a knock at front door; and with a quickening of her pulse, the young girl rose up and opened it.

A young gentleman was standing there, whom Lilias remembered having seen in the factory. He lifted his hat and courteously inquired if Mrs. Day resided there.

'She does; will you walk in, sir?' regaining her self possession.

Left alone in the little parlor, the young Southerner's dark eyes wandered eagerly about the room, as one's always do when their owner strives to identify his surroundings with some picture that has long been laid up in his memory.

But when Mrs Day entered the room, feebly leaning on the arm of her granddaughter, and he looked into her pale face, a shadow stole into the eyes of the stranger. 'You do not recognize me, Mrs. Day,' he said, after the preliminary compliments had been interchanged; 'neither you or your grandchild; and yet we have all three met before. Can you not remember?' and he turned to Lilias, and there was something in his smile that it seemed to her had dwelt long in the deep places of her memory. A perplexed expression was coming over her face, when the stranger shook out a small bead purse before her, and then the name of 'Arthur Hale!' broke involuntarily from her lips, followed by her grandmother's ejaculation of delighted surprise.

'Yes,' continued the young Southerner, and his rich, deep tones thilled the hearts of his hearers, 'I am he whom you found houseless, and you took him in—naked, and you clothed him—hungry, and you fed him—and more than all this, you poured into his weary, wretched heart, the balm of your sweet words and loving sympathy.

'He went from you a changed being—no longer man-hating and self despising.' He reached New York, and after a year of much harsh experience, he found the uncle of whom he told you, and his sorrows were at an end. Two long years since that uncle died, and left him the sole heir to his broad plantations. He told you, Lily Day, on that summer morning when he parted from you, and your blue eyes were filled with tears, that sooner or later he should come back to you. Behold! he has redeemed his promise!'

Lilias tried to answer him, but the words died in her throat, and placing her hands before her face, the tears she could not restrain dropped warm and fast through her fingers, and then, low and solemn through the silence, came the voice of her grandmother: 'I have never seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread.'

When May, that sweet poetess of the Spring, began to write out her beautiful fancies on the hills and meadows, there was a wedding in the little cottage 'among the hills.' Very beautiful looked Lilias Day, with the white May roses in her golden hair, as she went out from her New England home the bride of the rich Southerner, Arthur Hale.

☞ A New York merchant recently sent for a cargo Maltese cats from that celebrated Island, per schooner William E. Callis, of Nantucket, Captain Smith. Fifty kittens were received on board the schooner, as a part of the assorted cargo. On the voyage very rough weather was experienced. At first the tars attributed the rapid succession of gales to the comet but one old sailor told the crew that it was nothing outside the vessel that occasioned the storm; that one cat was enough to send any ship to Davy Jones' locker, and as they had fifty on board, not a man of them stood a chance of setting foot on dry land again. This was enough for the superstitious crew, and the cats were immediately demanded of the Captain, given up and drowned. By a singular coincidence, the storm thereupon abated. The owner of the cats has now sued the owners of the vessel for damages, laying the value of the cats at $50 apiece—or 2,500.—Alb Ex.

More than Two Hundred Million Dollars for Education.—At the last monthly meeting of the Connecticut Historical Society, Hon. Henry Bernard, the President, presented an interesting paper relating to the amount of donations bequests &c. made for educational, literary, and scientific purposes in the United States. The whole amount of land appropriated by the General Government for educational purposes to the 1st of January, 1854, was stated to be 52,070,221 acres; which, at the minimum price of such lands when first brought into market, represented the magnificent sum of 66,000,000 but which at this time could not be less than $200,000,000. The amount of donations and subscriptions by individuals far exceeds all that had been given by State Legislatures. Mr Bernard read from a table exhibiting the donations and bequests made by citizens of Boston within the last half century, amounting to upwards of $4,000,000.—Nat Intel.

Autumn Light.

I love this golden, autumn light
That lies across my room,
Far better than the strait flood
Of summer sun of bloom.

My heart fills with a quiet joy
To see the gold, and love
Put on their glorious, rich attire
And chant the hymn of the year.

I often sit where the fragrant shade
Mingled with sunshine falls,
Reading stirring tales of far off lands
Till I seem to see them all.

I can see the lotos by the Nile,
And hear its solemn wave,
And count the stars in the loveliest sky
On which the eye may gaze.

Led by some kindly preferred hand,
I wander far and long
'Mid the ruined fanes of the elder world,
Or through the sunny Mead of song.

Through all the day a blissful calm
Dwelleth on earth and sky;
And when the holy night comes on
Angels draw swiftly nigh.

In the still chambers of my soul
I hear their waving wings;
And light my grateful eyes to God
For all these lovely things. Wilma West

The Glasgow Poisoning Case.

The London correspondent of the New York Sunday Times has the following in regard to this celebrated case:

'At home our newspapers have been filled the past week with nothing but the details of the trial at Edinburg of Miss Madeline Smith, charged with the murder of her lover, D'Angelier. For nine days it progressed, increasing in interest, until yesterday, when the lady was acquitted on the first count of the indictment (as to administering arsenic to the deceased on the 19th of February last,) and the jury decided that the other two counts (poisoning him on the 22d or 23d March,) were 'not proven.' Scotch juries, you must know, decide by a majority, and a verdict of 'not proven' is an acquital, but means precisely what it says, leaving the party subject to another trial, should future evidence warrant such a proceeding.

'Everybody is satisfied that Miss Smith is guilty, but the witnesses were not even able to establish the fact that she saw D'Angelier on the fatal night. Besides this, he was proved to be such a worthless, heartless wretch, that his fate created no sympathy, and the verdict which released the prisoner was received with tumultuous applause. D'Angelier was a native of the Isle of Jersey, and was always boasting of his success with the ladies.—He had only ability enough to fill a position that earned him ten shilling a week, but he had good looks and unbounded impudence. He met Miss Smith when, at seventeen, she first left boarding-school. He seduced her, induced her to receive his visits at night in her father's house, without the knowledge of her parents; inspired her with an extraordinary passion; and finally, when she became sensible of her great error, he evinced no inclination to marry her himself, and threatened to expose her if she married a respectable business man of Glasgow, who sought her hand. She implored him to return her letters. He refused. Coldness then ensued between them. Subsequently she appeared to grow more affectionate than ever, she said to coax from him her letters; the prosecution said that she might obtain an opportunity to secure his death.

'D'Angelier died on the 23d March, and manifestly from the use of arsenic.—She was proved to have purchased that poison more than once, but always openly without disguise, and under the pretence that, mixed with water, it suited her purpose as a cosmetic. The deceased used arsenic also, but internally, as a beautifier. He had frequently spoken of committing suicide. In short, there was moral, but not legal proof of the prisoner's guilt, and the jury, very honestly, so decided.

Miss Smith attracted great attention There she sat all day, elegantly dressed evincing under all circumstances a perfect composure that was really marvellous. Her large, dark, penetrating eye was fixed, now on the witness, now on the counsel, but she met every look, every word, every suspicion, every charge, with the same imovable countenance. Her coolness and nerve only failed her when those Italian letters of her own were read in which words were left out in order to soften the gross indecency of some of her expressions of fondness. She is a wonderful woman, and looks like one of twenty-four, though she is but twenty-one years of age yet, with rosy cheeks, and a complexion still fresh and fair in spite of the late prison life.

"I am astonished at your decision," said a young lawyer to a judge, who had declared against him. "This remark cannot be permitted," said the judge, "and an apology will be necessary on your part." "Permit me," said the senior counsel, "to offer an excuse for my young friend; he is new in these matters, and when he has practiced as long before your honor as I have, he will be astonished at nothing."

THURSDAY, AUGUST 6, 1857.

The Supreme Court on Tax Titles.

We must confess ourselves somewhat surprised at the war of words, that has of late so much occupied a portion of the gentlemen of the press, with regard to the recent alleged decision of our Supreme Court, tending as it is supposed, greatly to weaken the heretofore by no means impregnable strength of Tax Titles in this State.

We have before expressed our regret at the manifest tendency on the part of the public at large to respect the decisions of the courts only so far as it may happen to suit the popular fancy or taste. Now this popular impulse is a very uncertain thing, and we are not sure that any of us would feel ourselves to be any the more secure in our rights of property or person, were they entirely withdrawn from the protection of law, imperfect as it is, and handed over entirely to that of popular impulse. And yet this is the direct tendency of the modern license and fashion of attacking the Courts upon any occasion in which the adjudication of the law does not tally with the momentary current of popular sentiment.

Feeling and fearing as we do the covert influences of this popular tendency, we cannot but regret any disposition on the part of the press to add to its unfortunate impetus in so dangerous a direction. It has already led to riot and bloodshed in more localities than one, and must in the end, unless repressed by calmer judgment, and a more wholesome reaction, terminate in the overthrow of all law, and the sanguinary reign of unrestrained anarchy. These at least are the manifest and direct tendencies, of all effort to lessen the force of a uniform popular respect for legal adjudication.

With regard to the merits of the decision of our Supreme Court above referred to we are not inclined to speak. In fact it is not yet certain that we know what that decision is. It was no doubt made upon due consideration, and by the authority in the State especially authorized to act and to decide in the case, and whatever it is, it is no doubt our duty as good citizens to regard and respect it as law until otherwise ruled by an authority equally competent.

We do not understand that the people have deputed editors, or even private lawyers, however able, or competent they may be supposed to be, to decide for them, especially as against the authority of the Courts what is, or what is not law, and any attempt to do so, may be regarded as at least, gratuitous, not to say unsafe and censurable.

If it had been the intention and desire of the people, that to these private individuals should be committed the decisions or interpretation of the law, they would undoubtedly have been placed upon the bench, instead of continuing them in the performance of the responsible, but nevertheless distinct, and widely diverse duties which now demand their attention. In this distinct and appropriate line of professional duty, these opinions are entitled to, and cannot fail to receive respect, but diverted to other purposes, so unhappily inappropriate as we conceive an attempt to dictate or proscribe the official action of the highest legal tribunal of our State to be, we cannot even concede to them the negative merit of a harmless officiousness—but must regard them as in a still more overt sense highly objectionable and dangerous.

We have no personal preferences nor partizan affinities in this matter, nor do we believe, the discussion has been conducted with any intentional disrespect for the authority of our Courts, but at the same time we cannot but express our surprise and regret that it should have arisen, our sense of its impropriety, and our fears for its manifest and almost inevitable effect upon the public mind. We respect the press as a powerful engine in the direction and control of popular sentiment, and would fain that it should in like manner ever be found a faithful sentinel and guardian of our free institutions, and not for any purpose, nor in any purpose, nor in any way, no matter how indirectly, be found lending its aid to lessen the respect of the freemen of America for any department of the only government in the world, whose moto and purpose has been "the greatest amount of good to the greatest possible number," and whose practical workings, thus far, thanks to the intelligence and self governed integrity of the people, the fear of tyrants and the hope of the oppressed of every land.

☞ "Oh yes, Joe, my father is an old mariner—a regular salt." "Why, I never knew that. What service was he in?" "The whaling service. He goes cruising around all night, and in the morning, when he comes home, he goes a whaling the whole family from the old oman down, and boxes the compass about the hired girl's ears."

Another Hail Storm!

Large amount of Property Destroyed

We supposed some two weeks ago, that we had considerable of a hail storm here, and so we had paying regard to the amount of injury done by its ravages, but the storm of Friday last convinced us that we really knew nothing about hail before.

It was not hail, but frozen pieces of ice from the size of hens' eggs, which were about the smallest, to those very considerably larger than goose eggs. Hail stones three and four inches in diameter were quite common, and from that up to fifteen inches in circumference. In several instances the shingle roof of barns and houses were broken through with a single hail stone, and in more than one instance the siding in like manner.

The storm was limited in extent, and was not attended with much wind, else the injury done would be greatly increased. It seemed to commence near Manchester, in Washtenaw co. and passing south east between Tecumseh and Clinton, reached nearly to Dundee in Monroe co., in all perhaps about fifteen or twenty miles in length, and not more than from a half a mile to a mile and a half in width. As will be seen by those acquainted with the country it crossed the track of the former hail storm in Macon in this county and as may be supposed, wherever such hail fell in any considerable quantities almost entirely destroyed all the crops that stood in its path; even wheat in the shock was much injured, that standing, with corn and oats was almost anhilated.

By this second calamity by storm, many of our farmers have lost their entire crop for the present season, some suffering to the extent of over one thousand dollars, and others less according to the breadth of land exposed. Many of the cattle were much injured, and some killed. Several of the inhabitants also were much injured by the hail, but we do not learn that any lives were lost. We had indeed heard of such hail stones before, but were inclined to think the accounts somewhat fabulous.

The above statements however may be relied upon as strictly true, and can be readily verified.

The Army for Utah.

A Leavenworth correspondent of the N. Y. Times, in speaking of the march of the troops to Great Salt Lake, says:

"Although the troops have all marched, with the exception of the company held in reserve for the Gov. the Fort and the country around it give evidencene of the preparations made for the expidition, The levee at Leavenworth City is browded with wagon frames, wheels and poles.—Placards are posted in all the bar-rooms, and on the corners of the streets, offering $50 wages per month to teamsters. Similar placards have been visible in St. Louis for several weeks. Much difficulty is experienced in collecting proper men for this service, notwithstanding the high wages. By the terms of the contract with the Quartermaster, they bind themselves to serve till June 1. 1858, and if necessary to team back over the Plains at any time before that period. If collected together, they would constitute quite a little army themselves. Nearly 3000 mules have been procured for the transportation of the munition and provisions, and a force of at least 500 teamsters is necessary for their management. The wagons were made at various places, many of them in towns down the river. They are six muled, without springs, and are all covered with white canvass, stretched over hoops. About half of those will be employed with the infantry regiments left last week. The white tops of many others are visible in every hollow of the undultating road, between the city and fort. Transportation is provided for most of the officers in six muled ambulances. The provision for this service has, however, been quite scanty.

The arrival of Gov. Cumming is now daily expected, but no definite information of his movements has been received at the fort. He will be accompanied by all the civilians lately appointed to office in Utah, not one of whom has left with the troops.

The Mormon War.—Just as formidable expidition, under the command of the most active and warlike of our Generals, is setting forth to bring the treasonable and horrid Mormons to terms, it appears that most of the exciting charges made against them, which have inflamed the public mind to a high and dangerous temperature toward them, are bold fabrications, or facts exagerated out of all semblance of truth. The Mormons were accused of the murder of Babbitt and others, but the widow of Babbitt returning after a wearisome pilgrimage, in search of the facts of her husband's death, bears witness that the Mormon had nothing to do with it, Judge Drummond circulated awful stories about the depravity of Mormondom, and it appears that he is the man who deserted his wife, leaving her destitute and helpless, and took with him to Utah a prostitute whom he picked up in Washington. The story that the records of the United State Courts were burned by a mob under the direction of Brigham Young, turns out to have been a falsehood, as the records are still in existence. Gen. Harney may find as little to do at Salt with his "army with banners," as has Gov. Walker with his eight companies of dragoons at Lawrence.—Cincinnatti Com.

General News.

Washington Aug. 1

The New Orleans papers of Sunday last are at hand containing Vera Cruz dates to the 21st and City of Mexico dates to the 17th.

As far as heard from the elections are all favorable to Comonfort.

It was believed that Benito Juarez a progressionist, was elected President of the special Court.

In the election for Deputies, in the City of Mexico on the 18th, the Liberals came off triumphant.

Serious alarm was felt regarding the state of affairs with Spain. The Secretary of the Interior had addressed circulars to the governor of the State on the subject. It is staed that a rupture was then inevitable, that he called on the Government to hold the National Guards ready for orders, and to transmit reports of their numbers and deficiency to head quarters. The Rio National says, that in case of war Comonfort will lead the army and Guarza act as President in his stead.

The news of the war with the Pinto Indians was conflicting. Gen. Alvarez had not succeeded in subduing them, and it was reported that his health had given way.

Gen. Lopez Venga who was formerly exiled has offered his services to Comonfort, in case of a war with Spain.

Vera Cruz papers were silent on the subject of the vomito.

The revolutionary movements at Jalapa in favor of Santa Anna, had caused the government considerable uneasiness.

It was generally believed at Vera Cruz that Santa Anna was in Cuba.

A despatch from St Peire Mignetto, dated 27, states that the barque Monarco of Warren, Me., from Gottenburg, for New York, was totally lost near Burino, on 21st ult., together with 50 Swedeish passengers. The captain, his wife, the crew and six passengers were saved. The six passengers were landed at St. Piere, and were sent on to New York in the brig Gille, by the American Consul. The captain goes home via Sidney.

New York, August 1.

The Police Commissioners ballotted for the 7th Commissioner to day, with the following result: Cyrus Curtiss 3; Royal Phelps 2; James W Barker 1. Twelve ballots have thus far been held. It is feared no choice will be made to day.

Halifax, August 1.

Private advices from England state that the home government has guaranteed £3,000 per annum in addition to the £7,000 given by the province to aid in the establishment of direct steam communication between England and St. John's N F. It is contemplated to run the steamers fortnightly by arrangement with the North Atlantic Steamship Co., thus giving the provinces with the trips of the Cunard steamer a mail from Liverpool weekly.

New York, Aug 1.

The Collins Steamer Atlantic sailed at noon for Liverpool, with 57 passengers, including Gov. Wright of Indiana as Minister to Prussia, and $364,400 in specie.

The Vanderbilt also, left at noon for Southampton and Havre with 180 passengers and 500,000 in specie.

The Screw Steamship Harmonia also sailed to-day for Hamburg.

Cincinnati, August 4.

Mason county, City Maysville:—Jones 113 maj.; Cox, 123 maj.; Taylor for Senate, 168 maj;—all Americans.

Washington precinct—Jones, 23 maj.; Taylor, 11 maj; Marshall, 7 maj; Worthington, 4 maj; Taylor is certainly elected to the Senate and Marshall and Worthington to the Legislature.—American majority in this county will probably reach 450.

Louisville city gives Marshall for Congress and Jones for Treasurer about 110 majority. Election quiet.

Lexington City gives Hanson, American, 161 maj. The county is not heard from.

Frankfort City gives Jones 169 maj, Hanson, 161 maj; Marshall for Senate 194 maj, and Lindsey for Legislature, 396 maj. No opposition. Returns from the county not fully in, but it is supposed to have gone for Clay by a small maj.

Dubuque, Aug. 4.

Iowa election passed off quietly yesterday. The vote in this City stands about 1200 Dem. and 400 Rep.

New York, Aug. 4.

Mrs Cunningham was again arrested to day on a charge of felony. It appears that at the trial before the Surrogate Mrs Cunningham hinted that she was enciente by Dr. Burdell. Suspicion was aroused and a plan formed to entrap her through her own physician Dr Uhl. A marked child was borrowed from the Bellevue Hospital and last night Mrs. Cunningham pretended to be delivered of it. The arrest is at the instance of Dist. Attorney Hall.

New York, Aug. 4.

U. S Frigate Roanoke arrived to-day, from Aspinwall, bringing upwards of 200 of Walker's men, 27 were sent to the Hospital immediately on her arrival. Geo. Tiernan died on the passage.

St. Johns, August 3.

The steamer Victoria which left this port last Friday for the purpose of intercepting the steamer Persia on her passage from Liverpool to New York has returned.

She reports a thick fog off Cape Race and no signs of the persia which has now doubtless passed that point. The effort to get her is therefore unsuccessful, unless the un pan containing the news has been picked up by some fishermen, in which case her advices may yet be received in season to anticipate her arrival at New York.

New York, Aug. 1.

The Police Commissioner ballotted to day 171 times for a seventh Commissioner, when the subject was postponed till Monday.

The Mayor's application for special policemen was refused. After a sharp debate Mayor denounced the Board as a partizan one. Subsequently a resoultion was passed, instructing the Supt. of Police to detail to the Mayor's office any number of the regular policemen as he may require.

Niagara Falls, Aug. 3.

Last evening about five o'clock, a large piece of rock weighing not less than 100 tons fell from the precipice on Goat Island, 300 feet from the British Fall. Four persons were at the foot of the precipice at the time and three of them were injured. C. W. Parsons of Cleveland it is feared, fatally; F. G. Williams of New Haven, had an arm broken, and a boy named Haney, had a leg broken.

Buffalo, Aug. 3.

A prize fight took place Saturday, P. M. at Point Abino, Canada opposite this city, between Bradley and Rankins, too Irish fugitives of Phila. The stakes were two thousand dollars a side. They fought 151 rounds, occupying two hours and fifty eight minutes. Bradley was the victor, Rankins being severely punished.

Washinton, Aug. 2.

On Friday there was a deluge of rain. From Macon to Montgomery bridges were carried away, embankments injured and trains were stopped in different directions. The crops were much damaged. Floods of the rivers were much feared rains through ut the State continued daily.

St. Louis, July 31.

The Scale and Safe Factory of Beard Bro., was burned last ninght.—Loss $30,000.

The front wall of the 3d and 4th stories of Monk & Ghio's Liquor store fell yesterday, burying five persons in the ruins, two of whom, Christopher Ghio, and Jackson, will probably die.

Balaimore, Aug. 4.

Primary elections are being held to-night by the Americans, for delegates to the City Convention. Two sets of delegates have been chosen in many of the Wards. There has been considerable disorder and some fighting in the 2d 4th and 6th wards, but nothing of a serious nature however.

Albany, Aug 4

The American Association for the advancement of education, met at noon at the Capital to-day. In the absence of President of the Association, Chancellor Patten, the Chair was taken by Amos Dean, L L D., of Iowa University.—Nothing was done but the reading of the Minutes, after which an adjournment took place till half past 3 P. M. The attendance was small.

Camden, N. J., Aug 4

Last evening, D W. Belisle, editor of the Journal, shot Chas. D Hincning, formerly the editor of the Democrat. The attack was by the latter who charged Belisle with the authorship of an article in a Sunday paper. The wound is not dangerous.

Norfolk, Aug. 4.

The United States sloop of war, Germantown, sailed to-day for China via Maderia and other ports.

Painesville, O, Aug. 4.

A large fire occurred in this village this morning, about 4 o'clock, commencing in an alley and extending to Main st., burning everything on the south side of Main street, between St Clair and State streets. Loss $75 to $100,000. About half of it was covered by insurance.

'Where a woman,' says Mrs. Partington, 'has once married with a congealing and warm heart, and one that beats responsible to her own, she will never wait to enter the maritime state again.'

DIED

On Sunday the 2d of August at his residence in the village of Tecumseh, of Congestion of the Lungs Stephen Yeakes aged 58 years.

Mr. Y. had only returned from a visit to the east the evening previous, apparently in his usual health but was taken suddenly ill shortly after retiring to rest, and although promptly supplied with skilful medical attendance, before morning ceased to breathe.

Mr. Y. came to this county from Sprytbus County N. Y. some ten or twelve years since, was a man of much intelligence and integrity of character, and his sudden and unexpected demise though ripe in years leaves a large circle of friends to mourn his loss. He was father-in-law to the late Hon. Darius Comstock of this place, and one recital son is in Buffalo and Rochester some of whom Richard Yeakes Esq., accompanied him home only to accompany him to his grave.

Buffalo and Rochester papers please copy.

Special Notices.

☞ Mrs. Bissell, Ambrotypist, takes the liberty to inform those wishing Likenesses at Clinton, that she will open a room in that village, about the 10th of August, and remain a short time.

Lost.

The undersigned, lost a young, medium size dog in this village some three weeks ago. He was a cross of the Newfoundland and Sheapard, with hair rather long and a little curly, mostly black with a white rib around his neck and legs, also, a little the end of his tail. Any person who will give information where he may be found, or return him to the said owner, will be liberally rewarded. A. COMFORT.

Embracing American History from the first period to the present time, by Hon. Howard Brownell, A M., bound in two volumes, and emblished with numerous and diversified colored illustrations. This work will be in two large octave volumes, and contain upwards of 1000 pages, and illustrated with over 100 engravings, colored true to nature, together with a map of the U. States Canada, Mexico and South America.

Mr. Smith, the agent for the work is canvassing this county, and we trust he will meet with success.

MOFFAT'S LIFE PILLS AND PHOENIX BITTERS.

It often happens that when a man has been suffering under a violent billious fever, that on recovery he will be afflicted with an acute nervous sensation, loss of appetite, tremulousness in the extremities, and rapid pulsation of the heart. The cause is the want of purification of the system, and a resort to the use of Moffat's Life Medicines will afford relief to the patient sooner than any other remedy known.

Sold by W. B Moffat, 335 Broadway, N. Y. Taylor & Curtis Agents, Tecumseh.

The Pill Trade. Who could dream of the magnitude such an undertaking as the manufacture of a Purgative Pill assums when it comes into general use. And how painfully do the following numbers speak of the amount of human sickness and suffering, that little morcel of a remedy goes forth to combat and subdue. Dr. J. C. Ayer of Lowell, manufactures in his laboratory forty gross per day of his Cathartic Pills, through all the year. This is eight boxes a minute or one dose a second. We thus find over 43,009 persons swallow this pill every day, or 1,290,000 a month! Physicians, think of that! 43,000 patients a day who seek relief from the medical skill of one man. Surely that man should be, as he is in this case one of the first in intelligence and of the highest character. His occupation entails upon him a fearful responsibility for the weal or woe of his fellow men. Painsville Courier.—For Sale by Taylor & Curtis, Tecumseh.

If all our readers who are troubled with Liver Complaint, Jaundice or Dyspepsia, will read the advertisement in another column of Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, and then do as we have done—get a bottle, we should not see so many sickly, half dead, despairing people as now meet our gaze at almost every corner for there never was a remedy of which so much is said, and that performs so near what its proprietors say it will do. It costs us so highly recommended that we could not fail to try it, and a trial has convinced us without a doubt, that it is the best family medicine in use. We take it for Headache, Sour Stomach, Biliousness, and any of the little bodily ills that are common, and it will produce a pleasant state of feelling to the and what is better after using it a few these little ills grow less and less, and there is a prospect of being entirely free from by a continuance in the use of the Invigorator. Now we wish to impress our readers with this, that the invigorator is a medicine particularly adapted to family use, and as there are children subject to little disorders as all children are, it is invaluable, saving physicians' bills, and an untold amount of anguish both to mothers and their little ones.

Local and Miscellaneous.

The illustration of Bunyan's immortal work, by painting, bids fair to introduce it to the popular mind almost as extensively as printing has done. The success of this panorama has been very great, and we hope it may continue its travels until every village and hamlet in our land shall have seen these brilliant paintings of the Pilgrim, and the scenes through which he passed.—Sunday School Advocate.

The above Panorama will be exhibited at Bidwells Hall, Friday evening. We hope our friends will give it the support it merits—A full house.

☞ The Grand Haven Clarion publishes a list of its exchanges this week.—This is right, and will do the same. We do not think its style is of so much benefit to the advertiser as the list of the Grand River Times, which gives the names of the publishers. In our opinion the italics small caps &c., shows poor taste in the Nation; but if it still presists in the necessity of their use, it will confer an everlasting favor by giving the HERALD the small cap touch.

THE NIGHT CHARGE.—Magistrate. 'What brought you here?' Prisoner —'Two policemen your honor.' 'Then I supposed liquor had nothing to do with it?' 'Yes, sir, they were both drunk.'—[Det. Adv.

OPINION UNSETTLED.—Public opinion in Kansas is still divided in regard to Gov. WALKER, according to a correspondent of the Missouri Democrat —one portion of the people believing him to be crazy, and the other drunk.

The destitution among the booksellers is becoming alarming. A large portion of them are giving notice of "nothing to wear," and some of them, "nothing to do."

A young lady was recommended to exercise for the benifit of her health, replied, "I will jump at an offer of marriage, and run my own risk, if that kind of exercise will do you."

☞ For a specimen of Wisconsin officers, a correspondent away out there sends us a sketch of Tom Noyes, the sheriff, a rough origanal character, of no education. He had always lived in the border, and knew nothing of the forms of law. But when he was called on to serve a writ of Habeas Corpus, he told the applicant "that wa'nt the kind of thing for him, but he would issue a writ of ram stam that would take the feller just as quick where he wa'nt as where he was!"

Judge Gosh, when he was on the bench the same county, used to keep the court room in a perfect uproar by his rock majesty and outlandish sayings on one occasion a couple of lawyers got into a hot discussion on some point of law, when the Judge rose, with all his dignity ringing on him, and stopped the mouths of the disputants by saying: "If the Court is right, and she thinks she are, why then, you are wrong, and she knows you is. Sundry, sundry!"

A DESERTED CITY.—The New Orleans papers represents that city as being even more desolate than the "Deserted Village" sung of by Goldsmith The editor says: "We can look out of our window at noon day on the once bustling Camp street, and see no one. Who opens the stores we know not—but we expect it is done by machinery as we never find any person in them. It is our intention to count the number of persons their names and addresses in a short paragraph. Money is said to be so awfully scarce, that the man of business remaining here thinks of discharging his collector and hiring a burglar in his place. We are the only editor left in charge of the city interests, and we have serious thoughts of letting out the streets as fine pasture grounds for sheep. Anybody in want of grass will please apply."

Phœnix Bitters

THE BEST FAMILY MEDICINE NOW before the public, for the cure of Scrofula, Ulcers, Scurvy, or Eruptions of the Skin, Fever and Ague, Dyspepsia, Dropsy, and in fact most all diseases soon yield to their curative properties.

It has been computed that during the last twenty five years upwards of FOUR MILLIONS of persons have been benefited by the use of these medicines; a fact which speaks volumes in favor of their curative properties, a single trial will place them beyond the reach of competition in the estimate of every patient. By their use the BLOOD IS RESTORED TO A HEALTHY STATE and freed from all impurities. The system is not reduced during their operation, but invigorated, and they require no restraint from business or pleasure.

The afflicted have in these medicines a remedy that will do for them all that medicine can possibly effect.

Cultivation of Buckwheat

From what we have observed we think few farm crops have paid better than buckwheat, during the few years past. There have, of course, been exceptions, in limited localities, but all that has been raised, has met with ready sales at good prices. We have seldom been able to purchase a good article of buckwheat flour at a less price than wheat flour. Indeed, so high has the former been at times that wheat flour of second grade has been extensively mixed with it. It is decidedly in favor of buckwheat that it can be used as a make shift, to fill in where from a late spring or other cause it has been impossible to sow spring wheat, oats, or other earlier crops.—It may be sown in this latitude for raising grain as late as the middle of July, but we advise earlier sowing, say by the first of the month if not before where it can be done as well at that time. For plowing under as a fertilizer, it can be sown from early spring to the close of August.

Buckwheat (Polygonum fagopyrum,) is sometimes called beeckwheat from the close resemblance of its kernel to the beech-nut. Its use for hot cakes familiarly known as "flapjacks" or slapjacks is too well known to require discription. The recently improved hulling mills for removing the black shell, has tended greatly to extend its use. It is also good for stock, pigs, poultry, &c. In Europe and also in some places in this country it is very extensively raised as food for bees.—It is grown for fodder, and if cured in a green state, and stowed away in small stacks of two or three tons each, or in a dry loft, or on an open scaffold, and then steamed before feeding during winter, or cut fine in a straw cutter, slightly moistened with water, & mixed with meal, it makes tolerably nutritious food for cattle and horses.—Finally, it is also grown as a fertilizer to be plowed deep under the soil when in blossom. Though not equal to clover for this purpose, still it enriches the land rapidly, and has the advantage of growing when and where clover will scarcely show its more delicate heads.

Soil and Prepartion.—The best soil, undoubtly, for Buckwheat, is a good, dry, light sandy loam; but it may be made to grow well in any soil if properly prepared. Fresh manure should only be applied to this crop when a growth of straw alone is wanted. When its grain is desired dissolved bones is the best manure; next comes a mixture of half and half of guano and bone dust. We have seen fine large crops raised on the poor sandy soils of Long Island and New Jersey, by an application of ten to fifteen bushels of bone dust per acre Plow deep, sow the seed broad cast, then the manure, then harrow well, and finish by rolling smooth.

Quantity of Seed per Acre.—If sown for a fertilizer or for fodder, put in one and a half to two bushels per acre; if for the grain, three quarters to one and a half bushels per acre, is usually sufficent. Sow broadcast or in drills as is most convenient.

Time of Cutting.—If for grain cut as soon as the berry is well filled with milk, and before it gets very hard.—Loss frequently ensues by letting it stand too long, for it is a grain that shells easily as the straw is turned in the field.

When wanted for fodder, cut just as it is going out of bloom, and cure the same as clover hay.

When plowed in for a fertilizer, do this in full, and cover as deep and as well as possible.—American Agriculturalist.

Iced Fruits.—Take fine bunches of currants on the stem, dip them in stiff gum arabic water, or the white of an egg well beaten, lay them on a seive, sift white sugar over, and let them dry. They are very nice for desert or for the tea table.

Bunches of grapes, cherries, or plums may be done in the same way.

Agricultural fair, Sept., 11th.

When does Wool Grow?—I answer, when it is wanted to cover the sheep and keep it warm. From the time the sheep is sheared until the frost comes you can see the shape of every clip of the shears; when the frost and cold weather, come it grows out immediately. Now if you wish for a heavy clip feed when the wool is growing. If you have any extra feed, then is the time to use it. The wool draws very hard upon the carcass, and growing out fast deceives almost every farmer. They think their sheep are doing well when they are growing poor; I can make an additional pound of wool with one bushel of corn, and my sheep will afterwards winter one bushel of corn easier. Let your sheep get poor while the wool is growing, and you cannot recruit them until the next summer,—J. R. Chamberlain in the Genesee Farmer.

Cleanliness of Pigs.—A gentleman put six pigs of almost equal health, to fatten; treated them with one exception exactly alike and fed them on similar food given in equal quantities to each for seven weeks. Three of these pigs were left to shift for themselves as far as cleanness was concerned, and the other three were carefully curried, brushed and washed. The latter consumed in the seven weeks less food by five bushels than the other three, and yet, when killed, weighed more by two stones four pounds on the average.—Ohio Farmer.

Tobacco- Its Natural History.

There is no positive evidence that tobacco was known to the nations of Europe before the discovery of America. In a short time after that event it was introduced to the notice of the Spanish nation by a monk of the order of St. Francis, who had become acquainted with its use in tropical America. He ascribed so many virtues to the plant, that it soon acquired the reputation of a miracle-working power, and was believed to possess medical virtues enough to remove all the evils to which humanity was subject.

About the year 1560, it was introduced into France by M. Nicot, ambassador from the court of France to that of Lisbon. From him it derived the generic title of—Nicotiana Tabacum—by which botanists still distinguish it Some twenty years latter—or about 1583—it was introduced into England by Sir Walter Raleigh. Since that time the commercial spirit of the English and American people has scattered it, almost over the globe, and it is now cultivated in most temperate and tropical regions, but no where, perhaps, more than in the United States. It is not, however, cultivated to such great extent in the north of Maryland, Virginia, probably, is most celebrated for its culture.

The seeds are sown in beds, from which the young plants are transplanted in May, set in rows, and closely attended to, to produce the full development of the leaves. This is done in part, by pinching off the flower stems so that the juices which should have been expended in the growth of flowers and seeds, increase the size and richness of the leaves, which are the only parts of the plant used.

There are several varieties of the tobacco plant mentioned by authors, some with narrow others with broad leaves; but these do not differ materially in strength. The great diversity we find in the article, is due to the difference in soil, and mode of cultivation and manufacture.

As it occurs in commerce it is, usually of a yellowish brown color, and has a peculiar, strong, and narcotic odor, which is less obvious in the fresh leaves than in the manufactured article. The taste is bitter, acrid and nauseous. It is truly wonderful, that with such a taste, and such an odor, it can still overcome the natural repugnance of so many millions of men and induce them to convert there mouths into mere cesspools of all narcotic filthiness.

Patent Medicines.

AYER'S

CHERRY PECTORAL,

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

Colds, Coughs, and Hoarseness.

Dorchester, Mass., Feb. 1855.

J. C. AYER: I feel it a duty and a pleasure to inform you of the great benefit I have derived from your Cherry Pectoral. For a long time I was troubled with a severe Cough, Hoarseness, Influenza, and the concomitant symptoms of a Cold; but your Cherry Pectoral, by its timely use, has relieved me in a few days, and my family for the last ten years has known it to possess superior virtues for the treatment of those complaints. RUFUS ENGLISH, M. D.

A. B. MORTLEY, Esq., of Utica, N. Y., writes: "I have used your Pectoral in my family ever since it was introduced to this city, and believe it to be the best medicine for the purpose ever offered. With a bad cold I should rather pay twenty-five dollars for a bottle, than be without it, or take any other remedy."

Croup, Whooping Cough, Influenza.

Sebastopol, Miss., Feb. 6, 1856.

Brother Ayer: I will cheerfully certify your Pectoral is the best remedy we possess for the cure of Whooping Cough, Croup, and the chest diseases of children. We of your fraternity in the South appreciate your skill, and commend your medicines to our people.

HIRAM CONKLIN, M. D.

Amos Lee, Esq., Montrose, Pa., writes, 31 Jan., 1856: "I had a tedious Influenza, which confined me in doors six weeks; took many medicines without relief; finally tried your Pectoral by the advice of our clergyman. The first dose relieved the soreness in my throat and lungs; less than one half the bottle made me completely well. Your medicines are the cheapest as well as the best we can buy, and we esteem you, Doctor, and your remedies, as the poor man's friend."

Asthma or Phthisic, and Bronchitis.

West Hanoverton, Pa., Feb. 4, 1856.

Sir: Your Cherry Pectoral is performing marvellous cures in this section. It has relieved several from alarming symptoms of consumption, and is now curing a man who has labored under an affection of the lungs for the last forty years.

HENRY L. PARKS, Merchant.

A. A. RAMSEY, M.D., Albion, Monroe Co., Iowa, writes, Sept. 6, 1855: "During my practice of many years I have found medicine equal to your Cherry Pectoral for giving ease and relief to consumptive patients, or curing such as are curable."

We might add volumes of evidence, but the most convincing proof of the virtues of this remedy is found in its effects upon trial.

Consumption.

Probably no one remedy has ever been known which cured so many and such dangerous cases as this. Some no human aid can reach; but even to those the Cherry Pectoral affords relief and comfort.

Aston House, New York City, March 6, 1856

Doctor Ayer: Lowell: I feel it a duty and a pleasure to inform you what your Cherry Pectoral has done for my wife. She had been five months laboring under the dangerous symptoms of Consumption, from which no aid we could procure gave her much relief. She was steadily failing, until Dr. Strong, of this city, where we have come for advice, recommended a trial of your medicine. We bless his kindness, as we do your skill, for she has recovered from that day. She is past as strong as she used to be, but is free from her cough, and calls herself well.

Yours with gratitude and regard,

ORLANDO SHERLEY, of Somerville.

Consumption, do not despair till you have tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It is made by one of the best medical chemists in the world, and its cures all around us bespeak the high merits of its virtues.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills.

The sciences of Chemistry and Medicine have been taxed their utmost to produce this best, most perfect purgative which is known to man. Innumerable proofs are shown that these Pills have virtues which surpass in excellence the ordinary medicines, and that they win unprecedentedly upon the esteem of all men. They are safe and pleasant to take, but powerful to cure. Their penetrating properties stimulate the vital activities of the body, remove the obstructions of its organs, purify the blood, and expel disease. They purge out the foul humors which breed and grow distemper, stimulate sluggish or disordered organs into their natural action, and impart healthy tone with strength to the whole system. Put only do they cure the everyday complaints of every body, but also formidable and dangerous diseases that have baffled the best of human skill. While they produce powerful effects, they are at the same time, in diminished doses, the safest and best physic that can be employed in families. Being sugar-coated, they are pleasant to take; and being purely vegetable, are free from any risk of harm. Cures have been made which surpass belief were they not substantiated by men of such exalted position and character as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Many eminent clergymen and physicians have lent their names to certify to the public the reliability of my remedies, while others have sent me the assurance of their conviction that ers have sent me the assurance of their conviction that my Preparations contribute immensely to the relief of my afflicted, suffering fellow-men.

The Agent below named is pleased to furnish gratis my American Almanac, containing directions for their use and certificates of their cures, of the following complaints:—

Costiveness, Bilious Complaints, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Heartburn, Headache arising from a foul Stomach, Nausea, Indigestion, Morbid Inaction of the Bowels and Pain arising Therefrom, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, all Ulcerous and Cutaneous Diseases which require an evacuant Medicine, Scrofula or King's Evil. They also, by purifying the blood and stimulating the system, cure many complaints which it would not be supposed they could reach, such as Deafness, Partial Blindness, Neuralgia and Nervous Debility, Derangements of the Liver and Kidneys, Gout, and other kindred complaints arising from a low state of the body or obstruction of its functions.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with some other pill they make more profit on. Ask for Ayer's Pills, and take nothing else. No other they can give you compares with this in its intrinsic value or curative powers. The sick want the best and there is for them and they should have it.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. AYER,

Practical and Analytical Chemist, Lowell, Mass.

Patent Medicines.

A Medicine that Never Debilitates.

DR. SANFORD'S

INVIGORATOR,

OR LIVER REMEDY.

HAS ALL THE GOOD QUALITIES OF A Purgative medicine, answering the purposes of any Cathartic without the debilitating effects experienced from most purgatives It acts slowly and gently, but surely, moving the bowels to every off all the secreted matter, at the same time, stimulating the Liver to a proper performance of its functions.

The Invigorator cures the Sick Headache. Take one or two tea-spoonsful at each attack and it will soon disappear. For an overloaded stomache, or when food rises or sours, take the Invigorator after eating, and it will not prove disagreeable or oppressive For Heartburn, Palpitation, or difficult breathing take a teaspoonful once or twice daily. For Loss of Appetite, Langu or Listlessness, the medicine is invaluable It will restore the appetite and make the food digest well.—Nightmare take a teaspoonful on retiring, and the demons of dream-land will all be fairies. After eating a heavy dinner, take a dose of Invigorator and it will relieve all oppression or fullness. The Invigorator is a Liver Remedy of unequalled virtue, acting directly on that organ, curing Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, Dysentery, Piles Worms, and all Female Obstructions, for which it has no equal.

We know there is nothing now before the American public, prepared with such skill by a scientific man, particularly for diseases of the Liver, as Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver Remedy. It has attained a reputation second to no other article in the world, simply because it rests on its own merit. To convince all by trial that it is all its proprietors claim it to be, if any of our readers are suffering from such diseases as are described in Dr. Sanford's advertisement, we know of no remedy that will so surely cure as the Invigorator.

There has lately been brought to our notice a medicine that seems to possess wonderful, curative and healing proprieties in diseases of the Liver, stomache and Digestive Organs It came to us with so many testimonials in its favor that we have noted its effects in some of the worst cases of continual debility, caused by deranged liver, and in every instance the effect was to relieve or give a permanent cure. Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver remedy is what we refer to. We always have been credulous about cures by patent medicines, but we are convinced that this medicine, for family use, is not over rated by the host of recommendations it has. Our advice is, for all troubled with Indigestion, Debility or Bowel Complaint, to get a bottle and try it; our word for it, relief will be experienced.

Blessings To The Invalids who use Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, for it will relieve them of their pains as soon as it is taken into their stomach. Pain and misery cannot exist where the Invigorator is used, for it will as surely drive them away, as daylight will banish darkness, of this there can be no doubt to those who try it, for it carries conviction with every dose taken. Another evidence is the thousands of certificates from those who use it or have been cured by it.—Try one bottle, if it does not benefit, then we are mistaken

Dry Goods and Groceries,

and shall be receiving from week to week, through the Season, any Goods that may be wanted, from the Eastern Manufacturers and Jobbers of

New York, Boston,

and Other Cities in the East.

I have tried during Nineteen Years of my life the various modes of doing business.

Firstly for Cash.
Secondly on Short Credit.
Thirdly, had to take Long Credit, Orders and Accounts.

Lastly, I have been compelled to wait for payment of Goods sold on Six Months time long enough for a man to visit California, get rich, and return, before payment could be forced or coaxed.

Now I wish to say, to my numerous friends and patrons, that I am thoroughly convinced that the mode of buying goods on time is both injurious to the buyer and seller.

I will hereafter Sell for Ready pay, at such prices that will defy all competion in this Town, State, or the United States.

No one should buy a dollars worth of Goods without calling at the

Great Western Cash Store,

and get the prices. Some are so unfortunate as to be compelled to trade at long credit stores—to those I would say, Call and see what you can save by having the Ready or something as good, to use where you please.

Call one and all, I wish to see the light of your countenance, and the cash from your pockets. B. J. BIDWELL.

The Rose of all the World.

BY GERALD MASSEY.

All in our marriage garden
Grew, smiling up to God,
A bonnier flower than ever
Sucki the green warmth of the sod.
O beautiful unfathomably
Its little life unfurled;
Life's crown of sweetness was our wee
White Rose of all the world.

From out a gracious bosom,
Our bud of beauty grew;
It fed on smiles for sunshine
And tears for dantier dew.
Aye nestling warm and tenderly,
Our leaves of love were curled
So close and close about our wee
White Rose of all the world.

Two flowers of glorious crimton
Grew with our Rose of light;
Still kept the sweet heaven-grafted slip
Her whiteness saintly white.
I' the wind of life they danced with glee,
And reddened as they whirled;
White, white and wonderous grew our wee
White Rose of all the world.

With mystical faint fragrance,
Our house of life she filled—
Revealed each hour some fairy tower,
Where winged Hopes might build.
We saw—though none like us might see—
Such precious promise pearled
Upon the petals of our wee
White Rose of all the world.

But evermore the halo
Of Angel-light increased;
Like the mystery of Moonlight,
That folds some fairy feet.
Snow-white, snow-soft, snow-silently,
Our darling bud up-curled,
And dropt i' the Grave—God's lay—our wee
White Rose of all the world.

Our Rose was but in blossom;
Our life was but in spring;
When down the solemn midnight
We heard the Spirits sing;
"Another bud of infancy,
With holy dews impearled;"
And in their hands they bore our wee
White Rose of all the world.

You scarce could think so small a thing
Could leave a loss so large;
Her little light such shadow fling,
From dawn to sunset's marge.
In other springs our life may be
In banner bloom unfurled;
But never, never match our wee
White Rose of all the world.

An Angel—"By-and-by"

There is an angel over near
When toil and trouble vex and try,
That bids our fainting hearts take cheer,
And whispers to us—'By-and-by.'

We hear it at our mother's knee,
With tender smile and lovelit eye;
She grants some boon to childish plea,
In these soft accents—'By-and-by.'

What visions crowd the youthful breast—
What holy aspirations high
Nerve the young heart to do its best,
And wait the promise—'By-and-by.'

The maiden sitting sad and lone,
Her thoughts half uttered with a sigh,
Nurses the grief she will not own,
And dreams bright dreams of—'By-and-by.'

The pale young wife dries up her tears,
And stills her restless infant's cry,
To catch the coming step, but hears,
How sadly whispered—'By-and-by.'

And manhood with his strength and will
To breast life's ills and fate defy,
Though fame and fortune be his still
His plans that lay in—'By-and-by.'

The destitute whose scanty fare
The weary task can scarce supply,
Cheats the grim visage of Despair,
With Hope,s fair promise—'By-and-by.'

The millions whom oppression wrongs,
Send up to heaven their wailing cry,
And writhing in the tyrant's thongs,
Still hope for freedom—'By-and-by.'

Thus over o'er life's rugged way
This angel bending from the sky,
Beguiles our sorrows day by day
With her sweet whispering 'by-and-by.'

GEN. JACKSON'S MOTTO.—"Think before you act, but when the time for action comes, stop thinking." That is the true doctrine. Many men fail in life, and prospects of happiness unrealized, because they did not adopt and act upon this motto. Nothing so prepares a man for action as thought; but nothing so unfits a man for action in the course of action. Better by far adopt some course and pursue it energetically, even though it may not be the best, than to keep continually thinking without acting. "Go ahead!" ought to be printed in every young man's hat and read until it becomes part of his nature, until he can act upon his own judgment, and not be turned from his course by every wind of interested advice. In conclusion we would say; "Think before you act, but when the time for action comes stop thinking."

To Punch belongs the credit of the following:

ROMAN CEMENT.—The French army; for it has been sticking in Rome now over so long, and the Pope finds it impossible to remove it.

Why are country girls' cheeks like well printed cotton? Because they are warranted to wash and keep the color.

A Mississippi Sporting Adventure.

I have often seen accounts of "hair breadth escapes." In 1837, I resided on the banks of the Mississippi, as I had from my infancy. I was then, twenty years old, stout and athletic, and passionately fond of wild scenery and sporting adventures. The month of October had arrived—the great season for partridge and deer shooting; and in accordance with my almost daily custom, I sallied with my fowling peice—one barrel containing a ball and the other small shot. I had succeeded in bagging some small wares, and in passing a small creek observed a raccoon busily employed in turning over the stones in search of frogs, worms, &c. Without giving the matter much thought, I succeeded in killing him, and being rather corpulent to carry through the woods, I hung upon a sapling intending to send for him next day; and as the part of the country which I was in did not very often afford large game, I charged the second barrel with shot also. I had proceeded perhaps a mile, and was crossing the outskirts of a tamarack swamp, through a succession of narrow and rocky glens, with high and precipitous sides, and had sprung from a rather high rock into a rift of not more than three feet wide, when I perceived the eyes of an immense buck glaring at me not ten feet distant. A glance showed me that he had no means of escape except over myself, and aware of the desperation of this otherwise timid creature, under such circumstances and at this particular season, I formed my resolution in an instant. I cocked both locks, placed my fingers on the triggers, and resolved to wait his spring, as I did not think my charges would injure him except at the very muzzle. I knelt upon one knee and watched his eye. All this took place in a very few seconds.

At length the haunches and ears were drawn back, and with a tremenduous snort he bounded in the air, with the evident intention of descending upon me. Quick as lightning both barrels were discharged full into his breast, and I received a shock as if from a pile engine, which deprived me of all sensation. About three hours after, as near as I could judge, I was brought to a state of partial sensibility by something licking my face, and growling, and scratching my clothes; I looked up—when, what was my horror to see a huge bear, coolly licking the blood from my lacerated breast, while two half grown cubs were tearing my legs and feet. The desperation of the case aroused me to sudden energy, and I slowly stretched my left hand (my right arm was broken) to my back for my hunting knife, resolved, if such can be called resolution, to sell my life as dearly as possible I had got it drawn from its sheath, and was watching a favorable opportunity to plunge into the brute's throat when, with a frightful roar, it fell across my body, apparently in the very agonies of death. A fearful struggle ensued, which soon put a stop to my feeble exertions—and I fainted again.

When I next came to my senses, I was seated, leaning against a rock, and a stalwart Indian youth who had been my companion in many a hard day's hunt, was busily employed binding up my wounds with leaves and strips torn from his own scanty garments. Not being able to take me home that night he made a fire and nursed me as a mother would her child, and next day carried, me by easy stages to my parents.

It appeared that he had called for me, but being told that I was gone only a few minutes, thought he would make up to me. He accidentally came to where I had shot the raccoon, but found some bears had broken the sapling and eaten it He then struck their trail, and followed them to where he saw the old one apparently devouring something, he did not know what. He fired, and being aware of their tenacity of life, waited to reload his rifle, ere he ventured to advance—a sad job for me, as by its dying struggles I have been maimed for life. It is worthy of remark that the deer had been so close upon me, when I fired, that his chest was singed, and that the barrels of the gun were found nearly eight inches deep in the wound formed by their own discharge, while I and the stock had been driven several feet by the force of his spring. —[Adventures of a Backwoodsman.

AN APT REPLY.—"Madam," said a doctor to the mother of a sweet healthy babe, 'the ladies have deputed me to inquire what you do to have such a lovely, happy, uniformly good child.' The mother mused for a moment over the strangeness of the question, and then replied simply and beautifully; 'Why, God has given me a healthy child and I let it alone.'

How That Verb was Conjugated.

I love! How absurd, said Fanny Whiting as we opened our grammars and took our stations along that turnpike, of confusion, to the unstudious, the recitation seat.

"Do you?" I asked

"Well, I guess Fred Williams thinks so."

"Quite likely, he is just green enough to conjugate this verb in its softest mode. I should think Mr. Clark might have found a substitute for the word," and Fan looked quite indignant.

Fan and I were friends and classmates. Fred had been, but a year or two before, he bid adiew to desk and discipline and devoted himself to the culture of his whiskers and his fathers farm. The whiskers soon outstripped the wheat in yellowness and luxuriance, and the corn did not get high enough from the ground to bend as gracefully as did Fred when Fanny's black eyes in their truant wanderings happened to glance towards him after the sabbath exhortation to 'love one one another,' had been concluded, and of course, I who had not been favored, was not slow to proclaim disapprobation and jealousy.

Read that portion of Porter, which says: "And he bowed down his head as a bulrush whenever permitted to choose a lesson. I had been obliged to play second fiddle during a half mile walk a few days previous, and been called Nell, although he said Miss Whiting every time he addressed Fan, so I had spent a week meditating on the best method of avenging my wrongs.

"Fanny," said our teacher, "will you trace love through its labyrinth of modes and tenses."

Fanny commenced, but stopped to blush, as I held up to view a story leaf that looked particularly blank, although I had worn my crayon to nothing and expended ingenuity lavishly to render it picturesque.

"I love," began Fanny again.

"Fred!" cried Rosy Gay, a little mischievous four year old, who at that moment caught sight of my artistic germ of nonentity and thought I wanted her to guess who it was.

By the way its too bad to send children to School so young, they don't understand what is required of them.

Amid the confusion that ensued, the sketch was transferred to Mr. Glen, who seemed I thought that of little worth, immensely. Fan excused me by saying it was a grand failure I had drawn for her, which was exhibited by mistake.

He pocketed both, so I found out afterwards. I thanked her warmly and vowed to persecute no more, which promise I kept as well as I could.

Spring came, and Fred brought flowers for Fanny to press; climbed the hills for everything green, pink or yellow, and waded much farther into the Lake for pondlilies than propriety could possibly sanction: talked knowingly of Calyx'es and petals, though some folks did not believe he knew the differece between a mushroom and marygold.

I heard that he consulted Botany and Byron before planting potatoes, but folks will talk so there is no believing them.

I thought Fanny had conjugated love in all of Clark's modes; if she hadn't it was not because an auxiliary was wanting; and what do you think it amounted to.

Why when autumn winds sighed over the withered bloom of summer Fanny bestowed her hand upon the Bachelor proprietor of wealth two wigs and fifty years, who always says: Fanny I know best I am a great deal older than you and the last time I called Fanny's love lay on a square yard of pillow, nicely diagramed in a muslin dress. Fred sighed, talked of California and consumption a few weeks and curled his whiskers again but not for me.

A SCHOOLGIRL.

GENIUS AND THE DOMESTIC TIES.—Moore laid it down as a rule that genius and domestic happiness were incompatible with, and excluded, each other. One day when he asked in Wadsworth's presence, if such was not neccesarily the case the grave Poet of the Lakes, replied,—"Men do not make their homes unhappy because they have genius, but because they have not enough genius; a mind and sentiments of a higher order would render them capable of seeing and feeling all the beauty of domestic ties.'

"Sure, it's a pity to see such a waste of powder," said an Irishman to a Kentuckian, who had just brought a coon to the ground, with his rifle, from a large tree. "Why so?" asked the hunter.—"Sure the fall would have killed him."

Asa and Ira.

Asa and Ira were two brothers, whose farms lay side by side in a fertile intervale.

When the corn, the oats and the barley were springing up, the weeds took advantage of the rich soil and came up with them.

"Do you see," said Asa "what hold the weeds are taking?" There is danger of their choking our crops entirely."

"Well, well, we must be resigned," Ira; "weeds as well as grain were a part of the Creator's plan, and there is no use in murmuring about them."

And he laid down for his usual afternoon doze.

"I can be only resigned to what I cant help," said Asa. So he went to work and ploughed and hoed, until his fields were clear of weeds.

"The army worms are in the neighborhood," said Asa to Ira one day.

"They have eaten through the adjoining meadows, and are moving toward us."

"Ah," exclaimed Ira, "they will surely destroy what the weeds have not choked out. I will immediately retire to pray that their course may be stopped or turned aside."

But Asa replied, "I pray betimes every morning, for strength to do the work of the day."

And he hastened to dig a trench around his land which the army worms could not pass—while Ira returned only in season to save a small portion of his crops from their ravages

"Do you see Ira," said Asa, another morning, "the river is rising very fast; There is but a slender chance of preventing our farms from being overflowed."

"Alas, it is a judgement upon us for our sins, and what can we do!" cried Ira, throwing himself down upon the ground.

"There are no judgements so severe as those which our own sloth brings upon us," replied Asa.

And he went quickly and hired workmen with whose help he raised an embankment that withstood the flood, while Ira witnessed with blank looks and folded hands the destruction of his harvest.

"There is one consolation," said he, "my children, at least, are left me."

But while Asa's sons grew up strong and virtuous men, among Ira's there was a drunkard, a gambler and a suicide.

"The ways of the Lord are not equal," complained Ira to his brother. "Why are you always prospered, while I am afflicted, and my old age disgraced?"

"I only know this," replied Asa, "that Heaven has always helped me to treat the faults of my children as I did the weeds, the caterpillars and the flood; and that I have never presumed to send a petition upward without making Toil, my right-hand servant, the messenger of my prayer."

A ROYAL SPECULATOR.—The greatest petticoated speculator of the day in Europe is Queen Christiana, late of Spain.—The passion with which this female Plutus launches into financial enterprises astounds the small fry among her male competitors. Not long ago this ex-royal lady went to Rome, nobody in Paris knew why. Soon she commenced constructing a magnificient palace there—another mystery. But now the mystery is solved Christiana has obtained from the Pope an immense railroad concession, and on such terms that it will double her recent great fortune. Her profits were so palpable that his holiness said to her that his people would murmer unless one or more of his own subjects were sharers in the enterprise. Christiana was obliged to consent, and the Pope's chief minister, the Cardinal Antonelli, was added to the documents of concession—still maintaining the affair in the family. The Pope, once seized with the mania of modern progress next determined on establishing a National Bank in Rome. Queen Christiana and the Cardinal Antonelli again appear as principal operators.

☞ Volumes have been written on marriage, but whole folios could not convey more of the philosophy of the subject than is condensed in a nutshell in the following answer by a woman to an old maid who reproached her for her choice of a husband: "To be sure he is not so good a husband as he should be; but he's a powerful sight better than none."

☞ There is a fellow in town who is so sharp that he uses his shadow to split firewood. He is the same fellow who is so long headed that it takes an idea six months to get behind his ears. The same man hung himself with a B line a few days since.

Come Back Soon.

Such was an exclamation that reached our ears as we were passing along a street in East Baltimore an evening or two since The speaker was a neatly dressed woman, young and beautiful. The person to whom she spoke these simple words, in deep tones of affection, was a finely formed man in the morning of life. But what caused her tears to flow? Alas! we could not fail to perceive that the being to whom she had given her young heart, and promised to love, protect, and cherish her, was a victim of the tyrant—Rum!—'Come back soon.' With a half surpressed oath the promise was given, as he hastily bent his steps towards his usual haunts of dissipation. 'Come back soon,' was again sobbed out from a breaking heart, as we resumed our walk. After our evening meal we repaired to the house of a friend, whom we had promised to visit. The time flew rapidly by in familiar converse, and the hour of midnight had sounded ere we parted. The streets were almost deserted, and as we passed a low grogery the sounds of drunken revelry were heard within. A man staggered into the street followed by a woman They were the same we saw in early evening. 'Come back soon.'—Anxiously she listened for his welcome step! How long the hours seemed to her waiting heart, as she watched for the loved one's return. Midnight came at last, but no husband Hastily throwing on her shawl, she wandered through the streets, heedles of the passers by, and even penetrates the haunts of vice to save a being she loved better than life. Fondly she clasps the degraded being, who was about to repulse her, when she exclaimed. 'Do come home, William; I left little Ellen all alone!' 'Little Ellen.' Those two words found a way to that mans heart. He hesitated, and drunk as he was, his eyes grew moist Still closer did that wife cling, and he was about to accompany her, when a miserable looking man staggered up and said, 'Is that you, Bill? why you are a stranger: come, let us go and take a drink, and talk over old times.' The temptation was strong—there was a fearful struggle in his bosom.—Again the invitation was given; he was about to yield, and had already moved a step towards the door, when his wife uttered through her tears, 'Ellen our child!' The chord was touched, and with a resolute 'No,' to his tempter, which sent a thrill of joy to that womans heart, he turned towards his home. Who can tell what hopes, what fears agitated that wife's bosom on their homeward journey, as that husband vowed to drink no more. We saw them enter their own cottage, and quickening our steps we soon reached our humble lodging. 'Our Child!—Such words; but they have perhaps, saved a human soul.—Baltimore American.

THE LATE MR. WHIRLPOOL, OF NORWAY.—It is said to have been demonstrated, as the result of a scientific commission detailed for the purpose of investigations on the coast of Norway, that the "Mælstrom," or whirpool, has not existed at least it is not to be found at the point designated upon the maps! It seems that not only large ships and whales,' but Edgar A. Poe, and the rest of us have been 'sucked in,' by it. What an opening for credulity and wonder of youth has thus been corked up! And how much poetic gas must be utterly turned off.—Poor, credulous, marvelling boys and girls of former generations (our own as well) have been taken in and done for by Olney Mitchell, and all the other geographers.—But science will yet swallow us all up in the ever narrowing circles with which she comes the whirlpool over ignorance and credulity. Western lands are sometimes improved to the extent only of a "hole in the ground;" but Norway has sold the whole world with her often mapped, but undiscoverable "hole in the water!"—W. I we hate to think that we have been humbugged, but, after all it is pleasant to have such a big hole plugged up.—Boston Post.

☞ Adversity exasperates fools, dejects the wise and ingenious, puts the modest to the necessity of trying their skill, awes the oppulent, and makes the fiddle industrious. Much may be said in favor of adversity, but the worst of it is, it has no friend.

The N. O. Picayune is making northern mouths water by smacking its lips over a basket of delicious peaches

The Willows by the Brook.

I knew a place in other days
A realm of rainbow glow;
Where a handsome stream and the grassy plains
Of a flower starred prairie met;
O, that was my Eden in early years
Where I thought not it time to look;
Nestled amid the willow fringe
That grew by a babbling brook.

There's many a haunt I love to trace
Upon life's checkered chart,
But none that claims a warmer place
In the sunshine of my heart
Than the clapboard of bark, with acorn cups
All pinned, in prose array
'Tween the wavy walls of my willow halls
Where I spent the hours of play.

Our plant bough, drooped pendant o'er
Where sparkling waters glide,
And oft two tiny forms it bore
Perchance too near the tide;
Then chidings many, and aprons wet,
And shoes of a muddy look,
Were trophies won by the elves who swung
In the willows by the brook.

In vain I look for the willows now;
Reform has laid them low,
And the the temple shrine they shadowed o'er
Moulde'red, O years ago;
My dusky playmate, long has slept
At the foot of old elm tree,
And a wail of sorrow away has swept
The song of early glee.

I would not ask the joyous hours
Of childhood, to return,
Nor wish my pathway strewn with flowers,
Their fading bloom to mourn;
But a sigh of regret and a tears upspringe
When on childish play I look,
And thought on wings, returns to the swings
In the willows, by the brook; H. H. S.

Arrest of Counterfeiter in Indiana

A PANIC AMONG THE DOCTORS.

Great excitement has been caused in the counties of Rush, Henry, Decatur, Delevan, and Bartholomew, Indiana, by the detection of a gang of counterfeiters engaged largely in the buisness of uttering counterfeit bank notes and bogus coin.—All the facts of the case have been furnished the Cincinnatti Commercil, from whose account we glean the following interesting particulars.

Mr. Reany was assisted by Messrs. Hay and Plowman, of the Indianapolis police and ex-Marshal Broadwell, of Dayton, all of whom co-operated in the developement of facts which make it that of an extensive and well organized association of men throughout Indiana, Ohio, and Kentucky many of whom occupy good social positions are systematically engaged in flooding the West with counterfeit bank bills and bogus coin. Upon their making the first arrest, several citizens of Rush and Henry counties devised excuses for sudden departure from home, and have not been heard from since. One physician informed his wife that he was going to mill, but as he has not returned, it is supposed he is awaiting the grist. Another suspected party left his luggage at the Galt House, in Indianapolis, and forgot to return for it.

The first man arrested was Dr. J. B. Patterson, of Carthage, in Rush county, who has enjoyed an extensive practice in his profession, and is a man of some property. He is aged about forty-eight years is malicious and vindictive, and has been accustomed to go heavily armed. After his detection, he confessed he had been engaged in the nefarious buisness for which he had been arrested about two years, but it is beleived that his criminality had a much earlier date.

The young man employed by Mr Reany, decoyed him into a snare by employing two men, to whom Patterson sold $50 worth of $10 bills on the North Western Bank of Virginia, after which he was suddenly arrested, taken to a private apartment in a tavern in Carthage ironed and imprisoned Mr Reany then asked him for the balance of $100 which he had agreed to sell, and by the prisoner's direction it was found with other packages amounting to $250 under the corner of his stand in his office. Three bottles marked quinine, full of counterfeit bills, were found in an attic above the office, besides rolls of old newspapers containing one hundred and twenty bogus half dollars. A cellar was likewise discovered under his bed room, the only access to which was through a small trap door in the floor, which was covered by a carpet. Mr. Reany describes it as a dark hole, very comfortably furnished with table, chairs, &c., in complete order for buisness. Counterfeit bills and bogus coin were abundant in various recesses of this hiding place. The most important discovery made here, however, was a package of letters from different members of the gang revealing their whereabouts and operations by the use of professional phrases, perfectly understood by all skillful policemen, as well as counterfeiting knaves.

Other exposures disgraceful to Patterson were made. He had seperated from his wife, who with her child, refused association with him, and he was accustomed to receive hordes of abandoned women in his office, where he ate and lodged.—Over a hundred indecent daguerrotypes of himself and his female friends were found scattered about his office. He now lies in the Rushville Jail being unable to procure $3,000 bail.

Northern Lenawee Agricultural Society

We would call the attention of our readers to a call for a meeting of the Executive Committee on the 22d inst, to make arrangements for the Annual Fair which is to take place at Tecumseh on the 10th of Sept. next—and we hope not only the Committee but our patrons generally will spare no pains to make the occasion of our Second Annual Fair one of unusual interest.

A large number of membership Tickets are already out, and those wishing to secure them will find them with the Secretary, and also at most of the stores in town, and in the hands of different members of the Executive Committee.—We would respectfully suggest that those favorable to the objects of the Society see that they are widely distributed and promptly taken up, and also that a general interest should be elicited to induce as extensive entries for Exhibition as possible. We understand there is to be an active competition for the prizes, making the occasion worthy the attention of those in the Agricultural interest.

Prof. A. B Palmer of Michigan University will deliver an address for the occasion.

State Teachers Association.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers generally, and of the friends of education in particular, to the meeting of the State Teachers Association at Adrian on Tuesday, Wednesday, Tursday and Friday of next week, a notice of which will be found in another column. It will be an occasion of much interest and the general anticipation is that the attendance will be unusually large—and the programme for the exercises is certainly one well calculated to command attention.

It will well repay those who can command the time, to attend the entire sessions, and especially is it desirable that those engaged in public instruction should improve the opportunity of doing so.

The influence of conventions of this kind is not by any means confined to teachers, but its reflex character comes at length to pervade extensively the entire community. The different topics discussed, a very large portion of them, involve scarcely more the duties of teachers than those of parents and guardians, and in order to ensure complete success it is scarcely less important that parents than teachers should be well informed, upon the general subjects of popular instruction and primary discipline. Anything therefore that is calculated to bring about this result, cannot but be found a valuable auxiliary to the cause, and well worthy a liberal public patronage.

It is not the mere appropration of money that will secure the success of any enterprise of this character, although this is of course desirable but it is the public interest and favor that has from the first marked the progress of educational enterprises in this State, that has already placed its present thoroughly organized and well endowed State system far in advance of many older States, rendering it in fact, in this respect, inferrior to none in the Union. We may well flatter ourselves therefore that a further indication of that same deep and abiding interest in the cause, may be evinced by a prompt and general attendance upon the Convention above refered to.

LOOK OUT FOR SHARKS.—Yesterday we noticed that two young sharks 7½ and 8 feet long, had been caught the previous evening in the East river, near the Fulton Ferry slip. Yesterday three others of still larger size were taken at the same place, and others, that nibbled the bait and got fast for a few seconds, effected their escape. On Monday last, a son of Mr Skinner, of Prince street, Flushing while bathing near that village, was knocked down and had one of his legs terribly lacerated in three places—it is supposed by a shark as he avers that he saw the fin of a large fish above the water only a moment before he was knocked down and wounded. By making a resolute spring towards the shore the water being only 20 to 30 inches deep at that point the lad escaped further attack.—From the above facts it is evident that sharks are numerous in the East river and probably the North river also at the present time.—Tribune Saturday.

Mr. Safford, counsel for Mrs. Cunningham, to-day submitted before Justice Davidson points of law why his client should be admitted to reasonable bail.—The justice reserved his decision till Monday.

MONTREAL, Aug. 8.

The Harris cotton factory on the Lachine Canal was fired last night by an incendiary and totally destroyed.

NASHVILLE, Aug. 8.

Returns incomplete, but indicate the election of seven or eight democrats to Congress, and two or three Americans, Zollicoffer and Ready Etheridge, doubtful. The Legislature is democratic in both branches. Harris' majority for Gov. will exceed 10,000.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 7.

The returns indicate the election of Runnel by about 12,000 majority. So far as heard, the opposition have not elected a candidate to the Legislature.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 8.

Fifty counties give Rollins 4,721 majority. A gain over Fillmore of 4,325.—Richardson, Scott, and Walton largely ahead for Supreme Judges.

Kansas advices state Walker evacuated Lawrence on the 3d with all the troops except forty. The ostensible cause that Indians had attacked Fort Ridgely, is regarded as a ruse to get the troops away.

The vote on the Topeka constitution stood 652 for 2 against. State ticket elected.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 8.

Third district still undetermined. It is clamed for Underwood, American. In 4th district Talbott, Dem. elected.

ST. JOHNS, Aug. 7.

The superintendent of the New York and New Foundland telegraph, is about to open an office at Trinity Bay, the point where the Atlantic cable is to be brought ashore. This will enable us to communicate the results to New York the instant the telegraph fleet comes in sight. The steamers are expected to reach Trinity Bay between the 20th and 26th inst.

AUGUSTA, Aug. 7.

Samuel C. Scott, Postmaster at Collins, S. C has been arrested for robbing the mail, and is now in jail here.

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.

Mrs. Cunningham made an affidavit to the effect that she was innocent of the charge preferred against her, but that she was at present, from illness, unable to explain. Judge Davidson reserves his decision on the question of committal till to-morrow. The daughters have left the house 31 Bond street.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 7

The Kansas Herald of Freedom of the third inst., says that Gov. Walker had received advices from the commander at Fort Riley, that a force of Cheyenne Indians had reached that station, and that an attack was strongly expected. The Fort has no fortifications and only a half company of infantry. The Indians had driven the settlers in and committed several murders within sight of the post. Walker immediately sent Col. Cooke all the force under his command.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 8.

Kansas advices state that Walker evacuated Lawrence on the 3d, with all the troops, except forty. The ostensible cause that Indians had attacked Fort Riley is regarded here as a ruse to get the troops away. The vote on the Topeka constitution stood 632 for, 2 against. The State ticket is elected.

NEW YORK, Aug 10.

The Police Commissioners adjourned till the second week in September.

The President has reprieved John Smith, who was sentenced to be hung, for the murder of the cook, on the Brig Franklin Pierce.

Mrs. Cunningham has not been admitted to bail, but lodged in the Toombs. In the meantime her council have given notice that they shall apply for a writ of certiorari.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 10.

The receipts for the Pacific Rail Road Co., for seven months ending July 31st, are $356,714. Increase over same months last year are $160,350.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.

The special agent sent to Minnesota, reports that no further outrages have been perpetrated by the Indians, and says local alarm prevails among the settlers and they are daily deserting their improvements and leaving the territory, but thinks the arrival of troops will restore confidence and effectually overawe the Indians.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 11.

Ninety counties give Rollins a majority of about 3,000. But returns are so conflicting, accurate figures cannot be given. Rollins probably elected by 1,500 majority.

The Republican learns that John Hartness, late comptroller of this city, has been appointed Secretary of Utah.

Santa Fe mail reached Independence on the 7th. News unimportant. The Cheyenne Indians refused to receive the presents from the agent or make a treaty, saying they can make more by stealing. The Pawnees also threaten hostilities.

Kansas advices to the 8th are received. Walker returned to Lawrence with troops, the apprehension of an Indian attack proving groundless.

The officers of the city government met on the 7th, and are perfecting ordinances.

Election returns indicate nearly a unanimous vote in favor of the Topeka Constitution.

HALIFAX, Aug. 11.

The steamship Canada now due at this port from Liverpool, has not, up to the present hour been signalled. Wheather pleasant.

THE NAVESINK TRAGEDY.—The late murder at Navesink has assumed a new and singular phase. The innocence of Donnelly to whom Moses laid his death is now claimed and strongly urged by many who heretofore believed him guilty. On Monday last, the body of Moses was exhumed at Chapel Hill Graveyard, and another autopsy by Dr. F. of this city. The wound on the throat was found not sufficient to cause death, had prompt and proper steps been taken. A wound was found too upon the arm, indicating that a struggle must have taken place. It is claimed that Donnelly being a medical student, was sufficiently versed in surgery to know where to strike fatally, and the wound in the arm shows that much blood must have been shed, yet no blood was found upon any of Donnelly's clothing.—The direct accusation of Donnelly is accounted for by supposing the former to be greatly excited and that seeing Donnelly first he accused him. It is even claimed that the man may have committed suicide while temporarily deranged and that under hallucination he laid the deed on Donnelly.—N. Y. Times.

Every Teacher is invited to attend—Editors are desired to be present; and they will confer a favor by calling attention to the meeting.

From the St. Louis Democrat 8th.

Fearful Tradgedy in Leavenworth City.

Mr. Andrew Stewart, editor of the Steubenville (Ohio) Union, who has lately been traveling through Kansas Territory, arrived at this place on Monday evening, having departed Leavenworth City on Saturday night, the 1st inst., and favored us with the following particulars of a fearful tragedy enacted on Friday night and Saturday morning at that city. The statements of Mr. Stewart are derived mostly from personal observation, and may be relied upon as correct.

On Friday night, the 31st ult., a man named Stephens, living in Kansas City came to Leavenworth City, and while spreeing it around, went into a drinking shop called the Ward House. The barkeeper named Baines, became very friendly, and proposed a walk up the river, and took him to a spring on the bank of the Missouri river just above the Planter's House, where they were met and assaulted by two men who demanded their money or their lives The barkeeper Baines gave up his money and ran off. When he got to the lower end of the town he gave the alarm that a man was being robbed up the river at the spring. Several parties of citizens immediately went up and arrived on the spot just in time to find poor Stephens crawling out of the river, his body and head all beaten and bruised with stones and clubs, and his chest and shoulders bearing several terrible stabs and cuts. The citizens ran to his assitance, but the unfortunate victim, though struggling to speak, was too far gone, and presently died, without being able to utter a single word about the manner of his death, or the names of his murderers. Suspicion at once alighted upon the barkeeper Baines, and so outraged were the people and so violent the presumption of his guilt that a posse of the citizens at once arrested and held him in close custody. The news in the meantime spread like wildfire all over the city, and the excitement grew intense. An immediate trial of Baines was demanded, but finally it was agreed that he should be hung on the spot without judge or jury. A rope was procured & put around his neck, and already he was being drawn up to the limb of an overhanging tree, when he expressed a wish to make a confession. The crowd yielded & let him down to the ground.

STARTLING CONFESSION.

He said that he and two men, one named John Quarles, from South Carolina, & the other called Knowlton, had laid the plat by which Stephens was robbed and murdered, and that the same men had murdered another man, a short time before, and thrown his body into the Missouri river. He stated also that he and the men Knowlton and Quarles belonged to an organized body of about twenty five men, who lived and carried on the business of robbing and murdering in Leavenworth City, on the Island opposite the city and in the towns of Lawrence and Topeka. He then gave the names of as many of the gang as he could remember to the authorities.

THE ARRESTS.

As soon as Baines had finished his revelations he was committed to the calaboose, a one story stone building, about sixteen feet square The crowd then went off in pursuit of Quarles and Knowlton, and in a short time had them arrested. Among the revealed conspirators was Wm. Woods, proprietor of the greater part of Leavenworth Island, and regarded by his accquaintances as an honest man and good citizen. A party proceeded to arrest him, and making a thorough search of his house, found, twenty five hundred dollars in counterfeit money, a lot of counterfeiting plates and other instruments, and a knife and pistol belonging to the murdered man Stephens. At these conclusive proofs of the correctness of the confessions of Baines, the people were deeply moved, and held counsel together in large and small parties during the whole night.

THE PROCEEDINGS ON SATURDAY—QUARLES AND BAINES.

We give the narrative of Mr. Stewart. He says: "I went to the Mayor's office on Saturday morning, and found an immense crowd awaiting the result of the examination of Woods and Knowlton—Baines and Quarles were in the calaboose. While the examination was going on, Judge Lecompte was outside making a speech and espostulating with the angry crowd in favor of law and order. The cry of 'hang 'em, the d—d murderers,' arose frequently from the mob, but milder counsels seemed be prevailing when some one at once shouted, 'to the calaboose! to the calaboose!' and away a crowd of about fifty maddened men started for the calaboose. The balance of the people followed after in smaller parties, leaving Judge Lecompte almost alone, and the Mayor's officers relieved of its throng of spectators. They had been gone about fifteen minutes, when I heard a great yell I started after the crowd, and followed it to the bank of the creek which divides north and south Leavenworth, where there was a steep bank, and on its edge a large elm tree. I reached the spot just in time to see Quarles suspended from the tree, grasping in the agonies of death at the rope which was around his neck, while several of the mob were swinging on to his arms and legs, to make his death sure. His body had hardly ceased its convulsions when the shout was raised for Baines.

The rope was placed about his neck, and he was led to the edge of the bank, when some one of the citizens appeared by his side, and with a watch in hand demanded five minutes' for further confessions. They granted it; when Baines said if they would let him, he would show them another man in town who was concerned in the operations of the gang He was taken to the calaboose, but for some reason did not give satisfaction to the people, and they demanded his body to be returned to them. Judge Lecompte again addressed the people, and with some effect, for they seemed to divide into two parties the one clamoring for the hanging of the prisoner, and the other demanding a trial for him.

Marshall Denis of the Territory was also present, and though he exerted himself with all his power, he could not maintain his position at the door of the calaboose nor prevail upon the crowd to disperse. The wife of Baines also appeared, and, inspired by the dangerous situation of her husband, took a heroic stand on the entrance, and endeavored by frantic threats and entreaties to stay the wrath of the populace. But all efforts were unavailing, the peace party were overpowered. Judge Lecompte's voice was drowned by the shrieks of the mob. A large piece of hewn timber perhaps twenty five feet long and one foot square was lifted up by a crowd of men and plunged with fearful effect against the calaboose door. The sight of the wife's distress, and the sound of her screams, mingled with the ragings and shrieks of the mob, was too much for me, and I turned my back and walked away.

I heard another blow from the piece of timber, and a simultaneous shout from the crowd, which told me that the door had given way, and the prisoner was at the mercy of the people. I walked hastily around the square, for with all its terror there was a fascination in the sight, and reached the spot just in time to see the mod rushing down the street with the prisoner toward the creek and the elm tree. I pursued, and when I reached the spot the body of Baines was already in the air, and his last death struggles were shivering along his limbs. The crowd appeared to be satisfied. Woods and Knowlton meanwhile had been placed in an omnibus and hurried off to the fort.—The city continued very much excited up to the hour I left, but no further violence was anticipated. All sorts of stories prevailed, and many of the mysterious disappearances and robberies which have occurred in the territory are all being referred to this band of murderers.

This news is truly startling. We shall await confirmation with much anxiety.

☞ A quantity of Household furniture &c. to be sold at Auction by Mrs. C. H. Smith of Brownville, on Tuesday Aug. 18th.

☞ We publish a list of exchanges this week, and will keep them a standing advertisement on the 1st side of our paper. Some proprietors' names are omitted and we are compelled to wait until we receive one of their papers, having forgotten them.

☞ New wheat comes in slow. The price offered is $1,25 which is 12½ cts. above any western quotation we noticed yet. A gentleman in Lexington K. Y. offers to supply all demands for flour at his mill for $5 per barrel. They talk about 35 bushels north, south and west of us. The crop here, is generally speaking an average.

North's Circus.—We would call attention to the advertisement of this company which will be found in another column. We do not personally know anything more with regard to the matter than what appears in that, but it certainly ought to be well worth while to see it, for as we are informed, it cost the company Ten Dollars in cash and Forty-Five tickets to the Board to get a License to Exhibit in the village. Though compelled to trespass upon the reading columns of our paper this week, with the advertisement we hope it will prove as interesting to our readers as it is to us.

☞ Richard Baylis presented us with a copy of the Ulster Co Gazette, published the 4th of January 1800. It is dressed in mourning for George Washington and gives a full description of the funeral. It is a valuable relic and a curiosity.

☞ A wicked cotemporary says, no ladies visit him because they cannot get through the door without undressing.

☞ An editor in Minnesota threatens to break up house-keeping and go to boarding with his delinquent subscribers.

Illinois Wheat.—We see it stated that a gentleman of Illinois has a field of wheat which encloses 3,000 acres and in which were twelve reaping machines at the same time. Such a field would hardly be reaped without machinery.

☞ The Editors and Publishers of Wisconsin held a convention at Portage City, July 9th A scale of prices for advertising was adopted, and resolutions passed in favor of advance payment of subscription and transient advertising.—A similar convention ought to be held in Michigan.

☞ It is said that a man out west was so cross-eyed, that in trying to get to sleep he wrung his neck off.

Seed Saving.

As every one who intend to practice economy, and obtain good results for labor and time, must attend to seed saving, it will now be time to begin.—As soon as any plants show a tendency to go to seed, select the finest, and by removing the inferior ones from directly around them, give them a chance to grow as thrifty as possible. In most if not all cases, it will be well to destroy a part of the inflor scnoe, leaving only the strongest and main stalk to mature. With some plants, as the carrot and parsenip, this is absolutely necessary in order to obtain good seed. As soon as they begin to flower, all but the central umbel should be removed. The seed from this will not only bring earlier, but much finer plants than if the whole were allowed to remain. So with the beet, which throws out such a large scattering head, the inferior and lateral branches should be loped off and the best stalks tied up and left to full maturity. Cabbage seed should always, be produced in the same way from a fine well headed stalk.

All of the above are to be procured by setting out good roots of the last year's growth in spring or early summer. No two varities of the same family should be set for seed near each other; otherwise they will mix, and generlly produce an inferior variety. This is especially true of the whole cabbage tribe.

Having properly matured and gathered the seed, care must be taken to that it be well preserved. This may be done best by putting up in wide mouthed and well stopped bottles, and keeping in a dry place. Closets, or cupboards in the wall, are not safe places, because of their liability to dampness whereby the seeds would be likely to gather moisture and begin to decay.—[Wis. Farmer.

How Coffee came to be Used.—It is somewhat singular to trace the manner in which arose the use of the common beverage of coffee without which, few persons, in any half or wholly civilized country in the world, now make a breakfast. At the time Columbus discovered America, it had never been known or used. It only grew in Arabia and Upper Ethiopia. The discovery of its use as a beverage is ascribed to the superior of a monastary, in Arabia, who, desirous of preventing the monks from sleeping at their nocturnal services, made them the infusion of coffee upon the reports of shepherds who observed that their flocks were more lively after browsing on the fruit of that plant. Its reputation spread through the adjacent countries, and in about 200 years it had reached Paris. A single plant brought there in 1714 became the parent stock of all the French coffee plantations in the West Indies. The Dutch introduced it into Java and the East Indies, and the French and Spanish all over South America and the West Indies.

Fresh corn the Year Round.—Mr. Dainel Rowe, of Lancaster Pa, has invented a plan for providing green corn for the table the year round.—He plucks green corn, and without depriving it of its milky juice or tatse, keeps it in a state or freshness and preservation, ready for boiling at any season. His process is described in his claim:—"What I claim as my discovery and invention is the new art and process of preseving green corn in the ear, by extracting the pith or heart of the cob and seasoning and drying the inside of the cob as rapidly as the outside, for preserving the virtues and juice of grain and prevent the collection of mould or corruption as herein described, and for the purpose set forth." A Lancaster paper says Mr Rowe is preparing suitable machines, not larger than those used for pearing apples by which every house-keeper can in one evening prepare ten or fifteen bushels of corn for his own use.

Potatoes Coming Down.—New potatoes sell at Cleveland for 20 cents per bush., at Cincinati for 25 at New York for 60, at Boston for $2,00.

To Prevent Cows from Kicking.

Messrs. Editors—I have owned for the past three years a cow that was very valuable for her milking qualities, but very troublesome on account of her kicking propensities. After I had made up my mind to dispose her on account of her bad habit, I happened to employ an Englishman, to whom I gave the advice of caution upon his first essay at milking. He smiled & said he could easily prevent that, and proceeded to pass a rope around her body just in front of her bag, tying it in a simple knot upon her back. The rope was not drawn very tight, and to my surprise the cow stood perfectly quiet through the process of milking not as much as offering to raise her foot. To test the remedy I directed him the next morning to intermit the use of the rope, and she immediately returned to her old habit. I had previously tried the method suggested in the Country Gentleman some weeks since, of tying up the fore leg, but without avail. She would still attempt to kick and in the effort throw herself. I have not had the opptunity of testing it with any other cow, but as it proved so entirely successful in the instance named (and my man informs me that he has seen it tried with uniform success) that I have thought proper to give you the result of my own experience, that others may be equally profited by it. A. C. Powel.

Lard and Tallow Candles.—The following method of making the above named Candles is described in the New England Farmer by a correspondent: "I kept both tallow and lard candles through the last summer, the lard candles standing the heat best, and burning quite as well, and giving as good light as tallow ones,—Directions for making good candles from lard. For 12lbs. of lard take 1 lb. of saltpetre and 1 lb of alum; mix and pulverize them; dissolve the saltpetre and alum in a gill of boiling water; pour the compound into the lard before it is quite all melted; stir the whole well until it boils, and skim off what rises; let it simmer until the water is all boiled out, or till ceases to throw off steam; pour off the lard as soon as it is done, and clean the boiler while it is hot. If the candles are to be run you commence immediately; if to be dipped, let the lard cool first to a cake, and then treat it as you would tallow."

Vinegar.—The juice of one bushel of sugar beets, worth twenty five cents and which any farmer can raise without cost will make from five to six gallons of vinegar. equal to the best made of cider or wine. Grate the beets, having first washed them clean and express the juice in a cheese press or in any other way which a little ingenuity can suggest, and put the liquor into an empty barrel; cover the bung with gauze, and set in sun, and in twelve or fifteen days it will be fit for use.

Late Sown Wheat.—This season has been remarkably so backward that very much grain will be sown late.—Oats, as is generally known, and quite likely to be injured by rust if sown late, but wheat in this (Onedia) county, does much better. The early sown wheat, in this vicinity, last year was not half a crop, while that sown about the first was of June gave a very satisfactory yeild. some farmers sowed part of their ground early, leaving the remainder till much later Their late sown was greatly superior By late sowing it seems to come on at an unpropitious season for the various insects which have for a number of years infested our wheat fields and they are compelled to look elsewhere for food, or die from hunger.—L. Farm of the Willows May 20 1857.

The Foreign grain Crops.—The latest European advices state that the growing grain in Great Brittian and on the Continent presents a highly promising appearance. The weather in England was genial.

For Dropsy, Plethora, or kindred Complaints, requiring an active purge, they are an excellent remedy.

For Costiveness or Constipation, and as a Dinner Pill, they are agreeable and effectual.

Fits, Suppression, Paralysis, Inflammation, and even Deafness, and Partial Blindness, have been cured by the alternative action of these Pills.

Most of the pills in market contain Mercury, which, although a valuable remedy in skilful hands, is dangerous in a public pill from the dreadful consequences that frequently follow to incautious use. These contain no mercury, or mineral substance whatever.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

and for the relief of consumptive patients in advanced stages of the disease.

We need not speak to the public of its virtues. Throughout every town, and almost every hamlet of the American States, its wonderful cures of pulmonary complaints have made it already known. Nor less are the families in any considerable community in the continent without some personal experience of its efficacy and power over the communities any where which have not among them some living trophy of its victory over the fell disease that genius discovered for the throat and lungs. Indeed it is the most powerful antidote yet known to mankind for formidable and dangerous diseases of the pulmonary organs. It combines the unquestioned most safest remedy that can be employed for infants and young persons. Parents should have it in store against the insidious enemy that steals upon them unperceived. We have abundant grounds to believe the Cherry Pectoral saves more lives by the consumptions it prevents than those it cures. Keep it by you, and cure your colds while they are curable, for neglect them until the Indian Hydra master the irremediable canker that destroys by the vitals, eats your life away. All know the dreadful fatality of bronchitis, and as they know too the virtues of this remedy, we need not do more than to assure them it is still made the best it can be. We assure no cost, no care, no skill is spared to implement perfection, and that the public may rely on it. The Cherry Pectoral is the best remedy known for their cure.

HOWARD ASSOCIATION

PHILADELPHIA.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

TO all persons afflicted with Sexual Disease such as SPERMATORRHŒA, SEMINAL WEAKNESS, IMPOTANCE, GONORHŒA, GLEET, SYPHILIS, the Vice of ONANISM, or Self Abuse, &c., &c.,

The HOWARD ASSOCIATION, in view of the awful destruction of human life, caused by Sexual diseases, and the deceptions practised upon the unfortunate victims of such diseases by Quacks, have directed their Consulting Surgeon, as a CHARITABLE ACT worty of their name, to give MEDICAL ADVICE GRATIS, to all persons thus afflicted, who apply by letter, with a description of their condition, (age, occupation, habits of life, &c.,) and in cases of extreme poverty and suffering, to FURNISH MEDICINES FREE OF CHARGE.

The Howard Association is a benevolent Institution, established by special endowment, for the relief of the sick and distressed, afflicted with "Virulent and Epidemic Diseases." It has now a surplus of means, which the Directors have voted to expend in advertising the above notice. It is needless to add that the Association commands the highest Medical skill of the age, and will furnish the most approved modern treatment.

Just Published, by the Association, a Report on Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, the vice of Onanism, Masturbation or Self Abuse, and other Diseases of the Sexual Organs, by the Consulting Surgeon, which will be sent by mail, (in a sealed envelop,) FREE OF CHARGE, on the receipt of Two Stamps for postage.

Address, Dr. GEO. R. CALHOUN, Consulting Surgeon, Howard Association, No 2 South NINTH Street, Philadelphia, Pa. By order of the Directors.

A Medicine that Never Debilitates.

DR. SANFORD'S

INVIGORATOR,

OR LIVER REMEDY.

Has all the good qualities of a Purgative medicine, answering the purposes of any Cathartic without the debilitating effects experienced from most purgatives It acts slowly and gently, but surely, moving the bowels to carry off all the secreted matter, at the same time, stimulating the Liver to a proper performance of its functions.

The Invigorator cures the Sick Headache. Take one or two tea-spoonsful at each attack and it will soon disappear. For an overloaded stomache, or when food rises or sours, take the Invigorator after eating, and it will not prove disagreeable or oppressive. For Heartburn, Palpitation, or difficult breathing take a teaspoonful once or twice daily. For Loss of Appetite, Langu or Listlessness, the medicine is invaluable It will restore the appetite and make the food digest well.—Nightmare take a teaspoonful on retiring, and the demons of dream-land will all be fairies. After eating a heavy dinner, take a dose of Invigorator and it will relieve all oppression or fullness. The Invigorator is a Liver Remedy or unequalled virtue, acting directly on that organ, curing Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, Dysentery, Piles Worms, and all Female Obstructions, for which it has no equal.

We know there is nothing now before the American public, prepared with such skill by a scientific man; particularly for diseases of the Liver, as Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver Remedy. It has attained a reputation second to no other article in the world, simply because it rests on its own merit. To convince all by trial that it is all its proprietors claim it to be, if any of our readers are suffering from such diseases as are described in Dr. Sanford's advertisement, we know of no remedy that will so surely cure as the Invigorator.

There has lately been brought to our notice a medicine that seems to possess wonderful, curative and healing proprieties in diseases of the Liver, stomache and Digestive Organs. It came to us with so many testimonials in its favor that we have noted its effects in some of the worst cases of continual debility, caused by deranged liver, and in every instance the effect was to relieve or give a permanent cure, Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver remedy is what we refer to. We always have been credulous about cures by patent medicines, but we are convinced that this medicine, for family use, is not over rated by the host of recommendations it has. Our advice is, for all troubled with Indigestion, Debility or Bowel Complaint, to get a bottle and try it; our word for it, relief will be experienged.

Blessings To The Invalids who use Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, for it will relieve them of their pains as soon as if is taken into their stomach Pain and misery cannot exist where the Invigorator is used, for it will as surely drive them away, as daylight will banish darkness, of this there can be no doubt to those who try it, for it carries conviction with every dose taken. Another evidence is the thousands of certificates from those who use it or have been cured by it.—Try one bottle, if it does not benefit, then we are mistaken.

Irving's Life of Washington

ILLUSTRATED.

GREAT inducements for Clubs. Messers G. P. Putnam & Co., having now published the first volume of the Illustrated Edition of Irving's life of Washington being the compiete life of Washington before the Revolution, are ready to furnish the same to subscribers free of postage on the receipt of $2,50. Single numbers sent post paid to any part of the Union on the receipt of 25 cts.

The following are the inducments offered to clubs desiring to subscribe to this magnificent and national publication. Any person remitting four subscriptions for the first volume comprising 14 numbers will be entitled to five complete sets delivered free of postage.—Clubs of six remitting $21 will be entitled to two extra copies of the volume or an extra copy of any other of Putnam & Co's., publications of equal value. Clubs of twelve remitting $42 will be entitled to four extra copies or an extra copy and a complete set of Addison's work, in six volumes; delivered free of postage. The same premiums will be given for a like number of subscriptions to the succeeding volumes. Each number of the Illustruted Washington will contain one, and every other number two first class steel Engravings or Maps. In addition to the Steel engravings, the work contains numerous elegant Wood engravings, illustrative of historical subjects.

Caution.—Persons subscribing for the Life of Washington should be particular to obtain the only work which must forever remain the standard authority: Irving's life of Washington bears the imprint of G. P. Putnam & Co., the only publishers of Irving's Works.

Every American should put this work side by side with his Bible on his book shelf. Let your children read it, and learn by the example of the Great Washington, the lessons of patriotism, moral courage, perseverance under difficulties, which the history of his life affords. We know of no American work which we had rather own than this; it is worth a thousand of the trashy publications which the press are daily sending forth.—[Scientific American.

I have tried during Nineteen Years of my life the various modes of doing business.

Firstly for Cash.

Secondly on Short Credit.

Thirdly, had to take Long Credit, Dockets and Accounts.

Lastly, I have been compelled to wait for payment of Goods sold on Six Months credit long enough for a man to visit California, get rich, and return, before payment could be forced or coaxed.

Now I wish to say, to my numerous friends and patrons, that I am thoroughly convinced that the mode of buying goods on long credit is both injurious to the buyer and seller.

I will hereafter Sell for Ready pay, and prices that will defy all competition in Town, State, or the United States.

No one should buy a dollar's worth of Goods without calling at the

Great Western Cash Store

and get the prices. Some are so astonishingly low as to be compelled to trade at low prices for cash stores—to those I would say, Call and see for yourselves what you can save by having the Ready Pay, and get something as good, to use where you now pay Credit prices.

Call one and all, I wish to see the face of every one of your countenance, and the cash from your pockets.

I Cannot Call Her Mother.

BY SARAH T. BOLTON.

The marriage rite is over,
And though I turned aside,
To keep the guests from seeing
The tears I could not hide;
I wreathed my face in smiling,
And led my little brother
To greet my father's chosen,
But I could not call her mother.

She is a fair young creature,
With a meek and gentle air,
With blue eyes soft and loving,
And silken sunny hair—
I know my father gives her,
The love he bore another,
But if she were an angel
I could never call her mother.

To-night I heard her singing
A song I used to love,
When its sweet notes were uttered
By her who sings above;
It pained my heart to hear it,
And my tears I could not smother,
For every word was hallowed
By the dear voice of my mother.

My father, in the sunshine
Of happy days to come,
May half forget the shadow
That darkened our old home;
His heart no more is lonely,
But I and little brother,
Must still be orphan children—
God gave us but one mother.

They've borne my mother's picture
From its accustomed place,
And set beside my father's
A younger, fairer face;
They've made her dear old chamber
The boudoir of another,
But I will not forget thee,
My own, angel mother.

The Origin of Cities.

The London Times of the 4th ult. commenting on the fact of the Queen of Great Britain being called upon to decide between the rival claims of four or five rival cities to be the seat of the Canadian Government, says:

"At present we can scarcely estimate the importance of the question. Before long it is probable that all British America will be under one government and at the present rate of increase and improvement by the end of another century the population will be as numerous, as wealthy, and as advanced in all the arts of the mother country. It is, then, the metropolis of an empire such as ours that has to be selected. The occasion sends one back to the earliest origin and to the grandest epochs of history—to the towers of Belus and the walls of Ecbatna, to Virgil's picture of infant Carthage, and Livy's legend of young Rome; to whom Alexander laying out with a line the city which still bears his name and justifies his sagacity; to Constantine founding, unwittingly, the seat of an anti-Christian empire, and Peter the great driving piles into the mud of the Neva. The origin of cities, indeed is generally wrapt in obscurity, and it is by the merest accident that they have become what they are. Even in our own time we have seen the seed of cities sown broadcast over new continents, some to wither or languish, some to shoot up into collossal proportions. In the memory of old men there was not an English man on the Australian continent, and with the life-time of schoolboys there was no such place as Melbourne—now a magnificent city of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants In the heart of the North American continent the oldest inhabitant of Chicago—a man of about fifty—finds himself surrounded by a vast city, and at the centre of an immense commerce.—But probably there never was an occasion when deliberate choice had to be made between several claimants, with all the results in view, and with full knowledge that posterity would canvass the decision. Why should Rome, or Paris, or Madrid or Vienna, or London be the capitols of great empires? Had we now to choose our metropolis how would Lancashire fight for the Mersey! how loudly would Edinburgh proclaim the grandeur of modern Athens, and Ireland her Atlantic site her mild climate, her picturesque shores, and her vast harbors! In almost every other instance the question is settled for us; and as each man pursues the path of his own advancement or ease, he unconsciously contributes to solve the grandest political and geographical problem. But this large responsibility—this creation of history to come—which we are thus usually spared, is, in the present instance, thrown upon the Queen and her ministers. They have to find or found a metropolis for British America."

A River Adventure

In the summer of 1832 I was engaged with a young man Lyman Kemp, in locating land lots along the Wabash, in Indiana. I had gone out partly for my health, and partly to accommodate one who had purchased a great deal of government land. At Logansport he was taken sick, and after watching with him a week, in hopes that he would soon recover, I found that he had a settled fever, and as the physician said he would not probably be able to move on under a month, I determined to push on alone. So I obtained a good nurse, and having seen that my friend would have everything necessary to his comfort which money could procure, I left him.

As good fortune would have it, I found a party of six men bound on the very route I was going, and I waited one day for the sake of their company At length we set out, with three pack-horses to carry our luggage, and I soon found that I had lost nothing by waiting, for my companions were agreeable and entertaining. They were going on to St. Joseph's, where they had already located, and where they had mills upon the river, intending to get out lumber during the remainder of the season.

On the third day from Logansport, we reached Walton's settlement on the Little River, having left the Wabash on the morning of that day. It was well on into the evening when we reached the little log-built inn of the settlement, and we were glad enough of the shelter—for ere we had fairly got under cover, the rain commenced to fall in great drops, and thickly too. And more still had I to be thankful, for my horse began to show a lameness in one of his hind legs, and when I leaped from the saddle I found that his foot pained him much, as I could tell by the manner in which he lifted it from the ground. I ordered the hostler to bathe it with cold water, and then went into the house, where we found a good substantial supper, and comfortable quarters for the night—that is comfortable for that section and that time.

About ten o'clock, just after I had retired, and just as I was falling into a grateful drowse, I was startled by the shouts of men, and the barking of dogs, directly under my window. As the noise continued I arose and threw on my clothes and went down.

'What is it?' I asked of the landlord, who stood in the entry-way.

'Ah—don't you know stranger?' the host returned. 'You've heard of Gustus Karl, perhaps?'

Who in the West at that time had not heard of him?—the most reckless, daring and murderous robber that ever cursed a country. I told the host I had heard of him often.

'Well,' he resumed, 'the infernal villain was here only this afternoon, and murdered and robbed a man just up the river. We've been out after him but he's gin us the slip. We tracked him as far as the upper creek, and there he came out on the bank, fired at us and killed one of our horses, and then drove into the woods. We set the dogs on, but they lost him.'

'And you've come back bootless,' I said.

'Yes,' the landlord growled. 'But,' he added with a knowing shake of the head, 'he can't run clear much longer. The country is in arms, and he'll either leave these huntin's or be dropped.'

'What sort of a man is he?' I asked.

'The very last man in the world you would take for Gus Karl He's small—not a bit over five feet six; with light curly hair, a smooth white face, and not very stout. But, Lord love ye, he's quick as lightning, and his eye's got fire in it. He dresses in all sorts of shapes, but generally like a common hunter.—Oho! he's the very devil, I do believe.'

After the tub full of whiskey and water which the host had provided was all drank, the crowd began to disperse, and shortly afterwards I went up again to bed; and this time I slept on uninterrupted till morning.

I had just eaten my breakfast and had gone out to the front door, when a horseman came dashing up to the place, himself and animal all covered with mud. It had been raining all night. The first thing the new comer did was to enquire for me. I answered at once to the name, and he then informed me that Lyman Kemp could not live, and that he wished to see me as soon possible.

'The doctor says he must soon die,' said the messenger, 'and the poor fellow now only asks for life long enough to see you.'

'Poor Lyman!' I murmured to myself. 'So young—so hopeful—with so many friends and fond relatives in his far off home—and taken down to die in a strange land!' I told the man I would set out on my return as soon as possible. He ate his breakfast and then resumed his journey, being bound as far as the Potamatomie border.

I settled up my bill, and then went for my horse; but a bitter disappointment awaited me. I found the animal's foot swollen very badly, and it pained him so that he could hardly step on it. Had the road been good, I should have been tempted to try him; but I knew that in some places the mud would be deep. I went to the host and asked him if he could lend or sell me a horse. He could do neither. His only horse had been shot the night before by the Wabash robber. There was not a horse in the place to be obtained for any amount of money I returned to the stable and led my horse out, but he could not even walk with any degree of ease. I could not use him. I was in despair.

'Look'e,' said mine host, as I began to despond, 'can't ye manage a canoe?'

'Yes—very well,' I told him.

'Then that's your best way. The current is strong this morning, and without a stroke of the paddle 'twould take ye along as fast as a horse could wade through the mud. You shall have one of my canoes for just what it is worth, and ye can sell it at Logansport for as much.'

I caught the proposition instantly, for I saw that it was a good one.

'If ye daren't shoot the rapids,' added the landlord, 'ye can easily shoulder the canoe and pack it round. 'Tisn't far.'

I found the boat to be a well fashioned 'dugout,' large enough to bear four men with ease, and I at once paid the owner his price—ten dollars—and then had my luggage brought down. I gave directions about the treatment of my horse and then put off. The current was quite rapid—say four or five miles an hour—but not turbulent—and I soon made up my mind that it was far better than riding on horseback. The banks of the river were thickly covered with large trees, I saw game plenty; and more than once I was tempted to fire the contents of my pistols at some of the boldest of the 'varmint;' but I had no time to waste, so I kept on. Only one thing seemed wanting, and that was a companion; but I was destined to find one soon enough.

It was shortly after noon, and I had just eaten my dinner of bread and cold meat, when I came to a place where the river came to an abrupt bend to the right, and a little further on I came to an abrupt basin where the current formed a perfect whirlpool. I did not notice it until I got my canoe into it, and found myself going round instead of going ahead. I plied my wood paddle with all my power, and soon succeeded in shooting out from the rotary current; but in doing so, I ran myself upon the low sandy shore. The effort had fatigued me not a little and as I found myself thus suddenly moored I resolved to rest a few minutes.

I had been in this position some ten minutes when I was startled by hearing a footfall close by me, and on looking up saw a man at that side of my boat. He was a young looking person, not over two-and-thirty, and seemed to be a hunter. He wore a wolf-skin shirt, leggins of red leather, and a cap of bear skin.

'Which way are ye bound stranger?' he asked in a pleasing tone.

'Down the river, to Logansport,' I replied.

'That's fortunate. I wish to go there myself,' the stranger resumed. 'What say you to my taking your second paddle, and keeping your company?'

'I should like it,' I told him frankly. 'I've been wanting company.'

'So have I,' added the hunter. 'And I've been wanting some better mode of conveyance than these worn-out legs through the deep forest.'

'Come on,' I said, and as I spoke he leaped into the canoe, and having deposited his rifle in the bow, he took one of the paddles, and told me he was ready when I was. So we pushed off, and were soon clear of the whirlpool.

For an hour we conversed freely. The stanger told me his name was Adams, and that his father lived in Columbus. He was out now on a mere hunting and prospecting expedition with some companions who had gone on to Logansport by horse, and having got separated from them in the night, had lost his horse in the bargain. He said he had a great sum of money about his person, and that was one reason why he disliked to travel in the forest.

Thus he opened his affairs to me, and I was fool enough to be equally frank I admitted that I had some money, and told him my business; and by a quiet and unpresuming course of remark, he drew from me the fact that I had money enough to purchase forty full lots.

Finally the conversation lagged, and I began to give my companion a closer scrutiny. I sat in the stern of the canoe, and he was about midships, and facing me. He was not a large man, nor was he tall. His hair was of a light flaxen hue, and hung in long curls about his neck; his features were regular and handsome, and his complexion very light. But the color of his face was not what one could call fair. It was a cold, bloodless color, like pale marble. And for the first time, too, I now looked particularly at his eyes. They were gray in color and had the brilliancy of glaring ice. The light was intense, but cold and glittering like a snake's. When I thought of his age I set him down for not much over thirty

Suddenly a sharp, cold shudder ran through my frame, and my heart leaped with a wild thrill. As sure as fate—I knew it—there could be no doubt—I had taken into my canoe, and into my confidence, GUSTUS KARL, the Wabash Robber! For a few moments I feared my emotions might betray me. I looked carefully over his person again, I knew I was not mistaken. I could look back now and see how cunningly he had led me on to a confession of my circumstances—how he had made me tell my affairs, and reveal the state of my finances. What a fool I had been! I had enough to do to look out for what was evident to follow

I at length managed to overcome all my outward emotions, and then I began to watch my companion more sharply and closely. My pistols were both handy and I knew they were in order, for I had examined them both in the forenoon when I thought of firing at some game.

They were in the breast pockets of my coat, which pockets had been made on purpose for them and I could reach them at any instant.

Another hour passed away, and by that time I had become assured that the robber would make no attempt upon me until after nightfall. He said that it would be convenient that we were both together, for we could run all night, as one could steer the canoe while the other slept.

'Aye,' I added with a smile, 'that is good for me, for every hour is valuable I would not miss meeting my friend for worlds.'

'Oh—you'll meet him, never fear,' said my companion.

Ah—he spoke that with too much meaning. I understood it well. I knew what that sly tone and strange gleaming of the eye meant. He meant that he would put me on the road to meet poor Kemp in the other world! I wondered only now that I had not detected the robber when I first saw him, for the expression of his face was so heartless, so icy—and then his eyes had such a wicked look—that the most unpracticed physiognomist could not have failed to detect the villain at once.

During the rest of the afternoon we conversed some, but not so freely as before. I could see that the villain's eyes were not so frankly bent on me as he spoke, and then he seemed inclined to avoid my direct glances. These movements on his part were not studied, nor even intentional; but they were intuitive, as though his very nature led him thus At length night came on. We ate our supper, and then smoked our pipes, and finally my companion proposed that I should sleep before he did. At first I thought of objecting, but a few moments' reflection told me that I had better behave as though I was an honest man; so I agreed to his proposition. He took my seat at the steard, and I moved further forward, and having removed the thwart upon which my companion had been sitting, I spread my cloak in the bottom of the canoe, and then having placed my valise for a pillow, I lay down. As soon as possible I drew out one of my pistols, and beneath the cover of a cough I cocked it. Then I moved my body so that my right arm would be at liberty, and grasping my weapon firmly, with my finger upon the guard, I drew up my mantle slouched my hat, and then settled down for my watch.

Fortunately for me the moon was up, and though the forest trees threw a shadow upon me, yet the beams fell full upon Karl, and I could see his every movement. We were well into the Wabash, having entered it about three o'clock.

'You will call me at midnight,' I said drowsily.

'Yes,' he returned.

'Good night.'

'Good night—and pleasant dreams. I'll have you farther on your way than you think ere you wake up again.'

'Perhaps so,' thought I to myself, as I lowered my head and pretended to lower myself to sleep.

For half an hour my companion steered the canoe very well, and seemed to take but little notice of me; but at the end of that time I could see that he became more uneasy. I commenced to snore with a long and regularly drawn breath, and on the instant the villain started as starts the hunter when he hears the tread of game in the woods.

But hark! Aha—there was before one lingering fear in the mind that I might shoot the wrong man; but it was gone now. As the fellow stopped the motion of the paddle, I distinctly heard him mutter—

'Oho, my little sheep—you little dreamed that Gus Karl was your companion. But he'll do you a good turn. If your friend is dead you shall follow him, and I take your traps to pay your passage to heaven!'

I think these were the very words. At any rate they were their drift. As he thus spoke he noiselessly drew in the paddle, and then rose to his feet. I saw him reach over his left shoulder, and when he brought back his hand he had a huge bowie knife in it; I could see the blade; leap in the thumb along the edge, and then feel the point! My heart beat fearfully, and my breathing was hard. It was with the utmost exertion that I continued my snoring, but I manged to do it without interruption. Slowly and noiselessly the foul wretch approached me—Oh! his step would not have awakened a hound—and his long gleaming knife was half raised. I could hear his breathing plainly and I could hear the grating of his teeth as he nerved himself for the stroke.

The villan was by my side, and he measured the distance from his hand to my heart with his eye. In his left hand he held a thick handkerchief all waded up. That was to stop my mouth with! Every nerve in my body was now strung, and my heart stood still as death. Of course my snoring ceased, and at that instant the huge knife was raised above my bosom! Quick as thought I brought my pistol up—the muzzle was within a foot of the robber's heart—he uttered a quick cry—I saw the bright blade quiver in the moonlight, but it came not upon me, I pulled the trigger and the last fear was past I had thought that the weapon might miss fire, but it did not. There was a sharp report, and as I sprang up and backed, I heard a fierce yell and the robber fell forward, his head striking my knees as it came down.

Weak and faint I sank back, but a sudden dipping of the canoe brought me to my senses, and I went aft and took the paddle. As soon as the boat's head was once more right, I turned my eyes upon the form in the bottom of the canoe, and I saw it quiver—only a spasmodic movement—and then all was still.

All that night I sat there at my watch and steered my little bark. I had my second pistol ready, for I knew not that the wretch was dead. He might be waiting to catch me off my guard, and then shoot me. But the night passed slowly and drearily away, and when the morning broke the form had not moved. Then I stepped forward and found that Gustus Karl was dead! He had fallen with his knife true to its aim, for it had struck near the spot where my heart must have been, and the point was driven so far into the solid wood that I had to work hard to pull it out, and harder still to unclasp the marble fingers that were closed with the dying madness about the handle!

Swiftly flowed the tide, and ere the sun again sank to rest I reached Logansport. The authorities knew the face of Augustus Karl at once, and when I told them my story, they poured out a thousand thanks upon my head A purse was raised, and the offered reward put with it, and tendered to me. I took the simple reward from the generous citizens, while the remainder I directed should be distributed among those who had suffered most from the Wabash robber's depredations.

I found Kemp sick and miserable. He was burning with fever, and the doctors had shut him up in a room where a well man must soon have suffocated.

"Water! Water! In God's name give me water!" he gasped.

"Haven't you had any?" I asked.

He told me no. I threw open the windows—sent for a pail of ice water, and was on the point of administering it when the old doctor came in. He held up his hands in horror, and told me it would kill the sick man. But I forced him back, and Kemp drank the grateful beverage. He drank deeply and then slept. The perspiration poured from him like rain, and when he woke again his skin was moist, and his fever was turned. In eight days from that time he sat in his saddle by my side, and together we started for Little River. At Walton's Settlement I found my horse wholly recovered, and when I offered to pay for his keeping the host would take nothing. The story of my adventure on the river had reached there ahead of me, and this was the landlord's gratitude.

The Evening Star.

Yon three are fair, an Herald fair,
Three bright and solitary stars,
Though lonely they do seem to be
There's not a star unknown to thee.

When Earth puts on her funeral hue
And nature's gone to night and rest,
There's naught in nature can compare
With three fair lonely evening stars.

Same as the sun rules in the west,
And night puts on her sable vest,
Though thousand twinkling stars I see
Yet there's but one compares with thee.

One wish I have I ask of thee
That I may thy companion be
And soar to the bright world afar
And dwell with thee, bright evening star.

The Mutiny on board the Whale ship Huntress.

We notice a telegraphic despatch in the Boston Journal, from this city of July 20, respecting the mutiny on board the bark Huntress, Captain Allen, of this port, already reported under our ship news head. The alleged cause for this mutiny as stated in the despatch, is that it occured "in consequence of ill treatment to one of the men by the captain, who thrust into his mouth a peice of iron a foot and a half long, knocking out some of his teeth, &c. The iron was kept in his mouth two or three minutes."

The above statement is not, we learn, in accordance with the facts. Captain Allen having in vain tried to silence an English sailor, named Ruland Carver, who was grossly impertinent, did for a half a minute a bit of iron in the man's mouth, but inflicted no special injury on him further than checking his mutinous outbreak. The cause of the difficulty appears to have been that Captain Allen determined while in the port of St. Helena to prevent the unusual license allowed to some of the ships then in port, in communicating with the shore, by which all discipline on the ship would have been destroyed; no special trouble occurred on the voyage until the Huntress arrived at St. Helena.

According to the letter of Consul Kimball, "the crew has assumed the worst form of mutiny in thus taking actual command of the ship, or rather depriving the master of it, and it calls for punishment if American shipmasters are ever to be sustained in their authority and American lives, property and interests are not to be put in jeopardy by a lawless crew."—There was no flogging on the ship during the voyage. Capt. Allen is a strict disciplinarian, but inflicted no punishment on either of the crew that was unusual and not demanded under the circumstances, as the other men on the ship aside from the mutineers, do not complain of bad treatment, the inference is that the offenders lacked the due spirit of subordination so essential on a whaling voyage. Mr. Kimball alluded in his letter to the want of a consular treaty with the British government for lack of which seamen cannot be imprisoned when at the port of St. Helena. The owners of the Huntress are satisfied with the conduct of Capt Allen in the premises. As some stories have been circulated respecting the want of provisions on this ship, we can state that the starvation process was not in force, and that in a voyage of eleven months and eight days the officers and crew, all told, 31 men, were furnished with 24 barrels flour, 31 barrels pork, 31 barrels beef, bread without stint, a gallon of molasses, a month to each man, besides good supplies of fresh meat, vegetables, beans, &c. in allowance to the above rations. (The crews of our whalers are not, as some outsiders seem to suppose, fed on a prison discipline system.)

That other crews in port with the Huntress persuaded the crew of the latter ship to demand more fresh provisions than they had, and also extraordinary licenses, which are never allowed where any proper discipline is maintained on shipboard, we have no doubt. It is for the Court and jury to decide if the captain exceeded the proper limits of his duty previous to their arrival at that port or while there at anchor. In our opinion, he is justified in his conduct.

One of the ring-leaders in this mutiny was from a respectable family in the West but has proved to be anything but an honor to them. The Huntress was a new and splendid ship, perfectly outfitted in every respect, and had every prospect of making a fine voyage previous to this unfortunate mutiny, which entails a heavy loss upon her owners.

The examination of the seamen brought home on the Huntress, Silas Borden and thirteen others, was begun yesterday, but postponed to 11 A. M. this day. Mr. Andros is for the government, and J. H. Prince for defendants.

Sources of Wealth in the West.

The rapidity with which wealth has been accumulated in the west has been a matter of surprise to the citizens of our older settled and eastern States. Persons without capital, and without any especial reputation for shrewdness or application, having made their home in the west, after the lapse of a few years are found to be in the possession of a competence, and oftentimes of a liberal independence.

The secret of this does not seem to be very thoroughly comprehended or understood either by the settlers themselves, or by their eastern friends. It is not ordinarily, either by any extraordinary economy or application that our citizens have acquired so rapidly an independence.—Coming into the country when it was new, and into the possession and proprietorship of land at a mere nominal value, while struggling along with the deprivations and hardships incident to their lot, and seeking for the most part only to live as comfortably as the circumstances of the case would admit, they have awaked to find that the few hundreds gathered together with little of either thought or care, have changed to as many thousands in their hands.

The tide of emigration, has given an undue value to produce, making the home market almost uniformly superior to a foreign one, while the land they tilled, reveling upon the rich fertility of its virgin soil, has in the mean time redoubled in value twenty, and thirty and even fifty fold—no wonder then that with even moderate industry and economy, men who all their lives before have waged with fortune, and a less genial soil, an unequal struggle for a simple competency, should look with something of an unbelieving surprise upon the independence within their reach.

But while this is undeniably true of almost the entire west, it is also true, that from the ease with which wealth is accumulated here, than arises a strong disposition to intermit that industry and economy which is essential to its accumulation or long enjoyment in older and more sterile States. Now it should be borne in mind that this state of things, so conducive to the building up of fortunes cannot last. It can scarcely be supposed to survive more than a single generation. Yet the danger is that those habits will be formed while it does exist, that will tend strongly to embarrass and impoverish a subsequent generation when it shall exist no longer.

Real estate will in time find its level, beyond which it will not for the most part increase in value, soil too will become at length exhausted of its native strength, and require the support of careful and expensive culture, and to ensure the continuance of the same degree of prosperity and competence, it will readily be seen will require these deficiencies to be made up by an increased diligence, and more strict economy. Let this subject then be duly considered in the education of the young, and in all the plans of future years, rather than disregarding the monitions of a considerate forethought, leave it to the embarrassment and humiliation of absolute want, to teach those lessons of thrift which ought to be rather anticipated, than forced upon a community after the severe and idle struggles of a melancholy experience.

BALLOONING.—Mr Lafontaine made a balloon ascension from South Bend, Indiana, on Saturday last, which was a highly successful one. Mr. L. in a communication to the Register, says:

At the greatest elevation attained, I could not see any thing plain on the earth. It appeared to be hazy and cloudy below. At 5 30 P. M., I made up my mind to come down. I could see a number of lakes below me, and I could not tell but what I might alight in one of them. I took hold of the valve rope to let off gas, and found the valve worked very well. I could hear the gas rush through the valve very distinctly. It was some ten minutes before I could tell that I was decending. In the course of fifteen or twenty minutes I found myself near the earth, and thought I was coming down in a patch of small bushes. But before I got in them I found they were very tall black ash timber, about 125 feet high. When about 800 feet from the ground, I took off my coat and hat and cast them out, to aid me in rising a little. I was about to pull off my boots, but before I had time to do so, I was dashed into a tree top at railroad speed. With a sudden bound I quickly grasped the limbs of the tree, still clasping the cords in my right hand, the balloon surging and drawing the top of the tree to which I was holding in the direction of the wind. I worked very hard for fifteen or twenty minutes to clear the balloon from the tree. At last I got clear from the first tree top, when it dashed into a second tree, I still clinging to the car. On this one my balloon was torn from top to bottom, and fell into a third tree, and I saved myself in the tree top. My balloon is, of course, very much damaged; but if I could have gone on but two rods further, I would have come down all safe.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Hunt's Merchants' Magazine,

The August No. of Hunt is received. Among its leading articles are "Commerce and Trade of Southern Russia," "Political Economy" "Commercial Commodities Characterized"—"European Commercial Correspondence", "Literature and Society" "California Fisheries," "The True Merchant" "Chinese Exchanges" "Mercantile Law" &c. &c.—Published monthly by Freeman Hunt Esq. No 142 Fulton St. N. Y. at Five Dollars per annum.

Dicken's Household Words.

The August No. of Dicken's, starting no doubt at the same time with Putnam's, received some two or three weeks since, has just arrived. Its contents are good, but "too numerous to mention." "The Hospital Student" is startling and interesting,—"The Dead Secret" is out at last—"Grayrigg Grange"—"How the Old Love fared" and "Story of a Grave" are all unique and well sustained. Re-Published by Messrs. Miller and Curtis, No. 321. Broadway N. Y. at $3 per annum.

Waymark's in the Wilderness.

The August No. of this monthly Journal of Scriptural studies, Current History and Literary Observations, Published by Messrs. Inglis & Jones St. Louis, Missouri at $2,00 per annum is received and welcome to our exchanges. Its Principal editor is the Rev. James Inglis, not unknown to many of the readers of the Herald as a ripe scholar, and ready writer, and having heretofore given our hearty commendation to the work, we only desire to note its reception, without further dwelling upon its merits.

Peterson's Lady's National Magazine.

The September No. of Peterson is promptly received and always welcome. Much attention is given to the Fashion Plates and work patterns, while the literary character of the work is such as to warrant the highest commendation. We will not attempt to enumerate the articles of the present No for to omit any would be to do injustice where all are so uniformly good.—Address Chas. J. Peterson, No 306, Chestnut St. Phila'd.—Terms $2,00 per annum.

Wellman's Literary Emporium.

The September No Wellman is promptly on hand. Among its leading articles are "Close Thought" by Rev E. Thompson—"The Wife" by Mrs. Lucy K Wells—"A Dream" by Lydia Jane Pierson—"The Rich Merchant" "Conflicts of mind &c. The perseverance of Mr Wellman in the prosecution of his literary enterprise is worthy of much commendation and will no doubt in the event receive its appropriate reward—Address J. K Wellman, Adrian Mich. Terms $1,00 per annum.

THE UNION BANK SANDUSKY.—The Columbus correspondence of the Cincinnati Gazette, gives the following explanation in regard to this Bank:

The Union Bank of Sandusky having been discredited and its paper selling at a discount of ten per cent as I see by your city papers, the Auditor of State has determined to send ten thousand dollars of the bonds, deposited by the Bank in his office, to New York, to be converted into Eastern Exchange, so that as fast as she returns her circulation to his office he will give drafts on said exchange.

This Bank, in order to go out of existence, has wound up all its business except its circulation, now reduced to an amount not exceeding $19,000, for which $19,000 of the bonds of the State, due in 1856 are deposited with the Auditor. The Bank is in the hands of a trustee, who has already deposited near about $2,000 of the circulation ready to be burnt, but until $5,000 are returned to the Auditor of State is not authorized to deliver up any bonds. Auditor Wright has concluded to take this step to prevent any further depreciation of that paper, as the people are protected by the bonds in his hands, and entitled to the New York Exchange for every dollar in circulation.

The following notice was posted up by a man in Cabell county Va., who recently changed his residence under peculiarly disagreeable circumstances. That man's eye to business is remarkably steady.

Mr. Sumner in London.

London, July 1, 1857.

Mr. Sumner is here, at Maurigy's Hotel, in Regent Street. I have not yet seen him, but some friends tell me he is looking very well. No American has been more popular in England than Mr. Sumner, and he is at present floating on the top wave of London society. I heard the other day a good story of his arrival here. He entered his name upon the book as simply "Mr. Sumner, Boston," and was accordingly set down by the landlord & his flunkeys as an ordinary traveler. The next morning one of the latter came to Mr. Sumner's room in some excitement and; "Lord Brougham is down stairs, sir, asking for you." To the waiters amazement, Mr. S. quietly said, without exhibiting the least surprise—'Very well show him up.' Not long afterward the former came, still more excited: 'Sir, the Lord Chief Justice has called and asks for you!' 'Show him up was again the cool reply.' After his lordship had departed, the waiter came once more, bewildered and a little aggravated: 'Sir, sir, the Lord Chancellor of England has called to see you!' Show him up,' repeated Mr. S. These astonishing facts were no doubt at once communicated to the landlord, for the next day's Morning Post announced the arrival of his Excellency, the Hon. Mr. Sumner,' at Maurigy's Hotel.

A man named John T. Barney was deliberately shot in Baltimore Monday evening, while standing quietly on a corner. On the morning of the same day, a man named Connor was shot by Lewis Sherman, with whom he had had a previous difficulty at a drinking house. Both men were seriously wounded.

Mr. Winants and Mrs. Tracy, eloped from Minneopolis, Minnesota, leaving Mrs. W. and Mr. T. behind them. The forsaken ones give notice that they have no intention of pursuing the fugitives.

MAIL ROBBER ARRESTED.—Henry Har', Esq., Special Mail Agent ferreted out a case of mail robbery at Wayne lately, and a few days ago arrested the perpetrator, A. B. Downer, at Northville in this county.

GRAND RIVER PEARLS,—The editor of the Lansing Journal "had a sight" at a "number of hundred" pearls found in the clams at Grand River. We would like to see them.

A young man named Meyer Lingston, who has been deranged for a short time past left his home in this city on Saturday, August 1st. He is 20 years old, has dark eyes, brown hair, and is about 5 ft. 10 inches in height, and had on when he left, a dark cassimere coat, check vest, & dark pants. He was last seen near Clinton in this county. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received by his brothers in this city Address Livingston & Holberg.

MYSTERIOUS AND MELANCHOLY AFFAIR.—A young woman, supposed to be a Miss Flora L. Mason, was found dead in her room at the Missouri Hotel, in St. Louis, on the evening of the 25th. She is supposed to have had some unhappy connection with a young man, for which cause she either destroyed herself, or died of mental depression and abstinence from food. Her history, if known, would no doubt be as sad as her fate. It is thought she was from Hudson, Michigan. In her trunk were articles having the following names, which may throw some light on the mystery:—A card bearing the address 'A. P. Mann, Hudson, Michigan.' Another card marked 'Washington House by Thomas Miller, corner of Eigth and Locust streets, Dubuque, Iowa,' (on the back of this card was written in lead pencil 'Box 114.') A letter envelope from some New York State post office, directed 'Charles Wm. Howe, Lane, Ogle county, Illinois.'

E. Meriam, of Brooklyn Heights, says that persons struck by lightning should not be given up as dead for at least three hours. During the first two hours they should be drenched freely with cold water, and if this fails to produce restoration, then add salt, and continue the drenching another hour.

A NEW REPUBLIC.—The Montreal Herald says certain gentleman are just now mooting quietly the confederation of the British North American colonies of course wholly as a patriotic measure which would wonderfully improve the position of the provinces, establish a great ally for England on the other side of the Atlantic keep back the Yankees, and furnish a viceregalty very fit for a crown prince.

General News.

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.

The Collins steamer Baltic, which was to have sailed to-day for Liverpool, is detained till two o'clock to-morrow—Sunday P. M.

A collision occurred on Long Island Sound this morning, between the steamer Metropolis, of the Fall River Line, and the propeller I. N. Harris, hence for New London. The collision occurred between Faulkenhead Island and New Haven. The Metropolis was bound to this port. The Harris sank almost immediately. She had on board 25 persons passengers and crew, of whom 13 went down with her. The following are the names of the lost:

Wife and child of A. K. Smith, of Brooklyn; Miss Gordon, daughter of Geo. Gordon, of this city; John, Elizabeth and Mary Smith, children of the Captain of the propeller; Stephen Prentice, of New London, mate of the Harris; Geo. Allen, deck hand; Mary Withers, chambermaid; Ann Withers, cook; a gentleman, wife and child, names unknown.

The following passengers were saved: Jno. P. Dupu, W. H Orr, Jas. Cahill, Sam'l Newman, A. L Smith, Jas. Mancy, Jno. Aires.

Crew saved: Capt. Leonard Smith, Geo. M. Thompson 1st engineer; K. N Ward, 2d engineer; Wm Graves and Jerry Flannigan, deck hands. The Metropolis lay by the spot until day-light, in the hope of saving others, but saw nothing.

The accident occurred in consequence of the Metropolis mistaking the propeller for a schooner. She having sails set, and showing no light head.

Geo. Tappan, of New Bedford, passenger on the Metropolis, died of Appoplexy soon after the accident. A meeting was held on board the Metropolis, and a committee appointed to collect subscriptions in behalf of the sufferers; who promptly raised $485. The night was clear and moonlight.

An incident is related of a woman, seen struggling in the water supporting her infant child in her arms. A rope was thrown to her, which fell within her reach, and with which she might have saved herself by relinquishing her hold upon her child. She saw the rope—pressed her child to her breast, and sunk for ever.

HALIFAX, Aug. 14

The Merchants' Powder Magazine containing the whole stock of Powder in Halifax, exploded with a terrific concussion shortly after midnight last night. One man was killed and 15 others were seriously injured. Five houses were demolished and several others damaged—The government magazines and the new barracks were much shattered, and nearly all the windows in the northern part of the city were broken. The damage is estimated at $100,000. The magazine is supposed to have been fired by an incendiary. For hours the excitement was intense. Many persons were thrown from their beds, and others bewildered, rushed into the streets for safety, believing an earthquake had occured.

ALBANY, Aug. 15.

A fatal accident occurred on the Albany and Northern Rail Road this morning. An axle of an engine broke, upsetting it. The engineer and fireman are supposed to have been killed. The particulars of the accident have not transpired.

AUGUSTA, Aug. 14

This has been the hottest day of the season. The mercury, at noon, marking 106° in the shade, this evening it is 96°.

QUEBEC, Aug. 15.

An incendiary last night, fired some wooden buildings on Point Levi, opposite this city, and twenty of them were destroyed.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15.

Chief Engineer Zoller, and and Assistent Engineers Potts, Ramsey, Hunt, Letting, Duplain, and Schley, are ordered to the Steamer Lawrence, now preparing for the Pacific squadron at Philadelphia. Commander Pickering has been detached from Portsmouth, N. H and Commander Brown is appointed as his successor.

Official despatches received at the State Department, speak in favorable terms of the ameliorating influence of the new Russian's tariff.

The commencement of its operation affords evidence that the present Emperor entertains views different from his predecessors and affords the hope that other important reforms may allow. Books in all languages are duty free; subject only to the usual censorship. Russian subjects living in foreign countries, can now travel five years with a reduction in the passport fees.

WASHINGTON, Aug 14.

If it be true, as stated, that Costa Rica has disposed of the Nicaragua transit route and has acquired part of the territory of the latter, our government will unquestionably object to that arrangement it being known that Wm. C. Jones was specially entrusted to represent the views of the administration on that subject as adverse to such a course of policy.

Until the meeting of Congress no diplomatic appointments will be made, except such as may be demanded by the public exigencies, as it is decided that successors to the present incumbents shall not go abroad until their appointments shall have been confirmed by the Senate.

Gen. Denver, Commissioner of Indian affairs, will shortly repair to Nebraska, for the purpose of making treaties with the Pawnee and Pawnee Indians.

A letter is now on the way to Fred. P. Stanton, Secretary of State of Kansas, tendering the appointment of Superintendent of Indian affairs, in place of Gov. Cumming, but the appointment is not to take effect until the meeting of Congress. The troops and civil officers for Utah are not expected to reach that territory until the first of Nov.

Satisfactory accounts have been received from all the wagon road expeditions excepting that of Col. Nobles, which has disappointed the expectations of the Government.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 18.

The Kansas correspondent of the Democrat says: Nearly 200 indictments have been found against persons in the neighborhood of Topeka. Six men were arrested at Franklin by dragoons and taken to the camp.

Rumor says Walker was indignant at Judge Cato's decision that payment of taxes was a requisite qualification for a voter.

Robinson has been notified to appear at Lecompton on the old charge of usurpation of office, on the 18th for trial.

ST JOHNS, N. F., Aug. 18.

As the fate of the enterprise for connecting this line with Ireland will much depend upon the character of the weather we shall report the same daily until the telegraph fleet arrives at Trinity Bay.

Yesterday the weather was cool with but little wind from the north west, and to day it is pleasant with a gentle wind from the west.

BOSTON Aug. 18.

By the arrival of the Barque Vernon at this port from Cape Town, we have news to the last of June. From the 5th to the 14th of June there had been tremendous gales on the coast. Ten large vessels, and a larger number of smaller vessels had been wrecked.

NEW YORK, Aug 18

The steamship Tennessee, from San Juan, on the 10th inst. arrived here this morning. She brings 275 passengers, of whom 260 were deserters from Walker's army.

The slave case in Westchester county was ended yesterday. Judge Robertson delivered the child over to her grandfather, John Bowles, alias Dimmock.

Wm. H Peck has been appointed Postmaster at Brooklyn, vice Daniel Vorhis, whose term of office expires Sept. 30.

The Chinese correspondent of the Times, writing on board the U. S. steamship San Jacinto, June 9th reiterates the report that the Island of Formosa is to be seized and held as an indemnification for the losses sustained by American citizens during the recent war. He says that Capt. Simons, of the marine corps attached to the San Jacinto, was, three months previously, dispatched to Formosa, with instructions to hoist the American flag in the city of Fung Shan, and take formal possession of the Island.

The same correspondent says, that the rebels in the Northern part of China have captured the cities of Hacnwoo and Genping in the Interior, and are advancing on Hohon.

The Imperial forces in the vicinity of the Paris Suchan, have revolted, driving the Governor of the Province and his officials from the city, and have taken possession of, and robbed the military chest of 50,000 pauns of silver.

Two thousand starving refugees, from Nankin, had sought and obtained relief at Shanghai.

NEW YORK, August 17.

The steamship Columbia left Liverpool at 10 o'clock on the morning of the 5th and arrived here at 7 o'clock this morning.

The screw steamship Jason was to leave Southampton for New York the same day.

The Aribia arrived at Liverpool Sunday morning the 2d.

The city of Washington was off Liverpool on the 5th.

There is but little news by this arrival. The English papers were mainly occupied with the rumors and speculations in the absence of further advices upon the affairs of India.

GREAT BRITAIN.—In the House of Lords on Monday, Lord Panmure introduced a bill empowering the government to embody and call out the militia at any time before the 25th of March next, without having to call Parliment together again. He said that a state of things existed in India which caused this great drain upon the Queen's forces as if the country was engaged in a foreign war, but to meet this drain ten new battalions were to be raised, and the regiments were to be increased from 840 to 1000 rank and file, and those serving in India from 1000 to 1200. All this could be done without going beyond existing acts, and the charge would mainly fall on the East India Co., but as time would be necessary to provide this increase, and the country in the interior be drained of troops, the embodiment of the militia might become necessary; hence the proposition.

Local and Miscellaneous.

☞ One week from to day, North's Circus will exhibit in this village. This company has traveled through the Northern part of the state, and given general satisfaction. If they perform what they advertise, it will be worth the price of admission. Look out for a crowd.

☞ We have received several papers from post masters, marked "Refused"—It is consoling to furnish a paper three months, and have it refused, without paying for it, or even thanking you for the money advanced, time squandered, &c. Now we don't calculate to be served in this style, without satisfaction. We will make a standing advertisment of your accounts, and publish it until settled—If you are poor come and say so, and we will freely donate the amount, but don't try to cheat us out of 50cts.

☞ John Fisher has lost a valuable colt—See Special Notices.

☞ Within the last two months twenty or thirty head of cattle owned by different persons in and about our village, have been lost. At first it was thought they had strayed, but circumstances indicate they were either killed and sold or shipped on the cars for the east. Similar complaints are general north of us. Farmers look out for your stock—also Bad Money.

☞ Strong & Drew are moving to their New Brick Store.

☞ We are informed that T. P. Brown aided by his Juvenile Class, will give a Concert at Bidwell's Hall on Tuesday eve. Aug. 25th. Mr. Brown has taken a great deal of pains with this class and deserves the cordial support of both parents and friends of the children.

Go and hear your children sing.

☞ Sabbath School celebrations are becoming popular. Our friends at Ridgeway hold their celebration on Tuesday, August 24th. Also, at Pennington's Corners, Thursday, August 27th. The Tecumseh Band play at both.

☞ Jones & Brown have fitted their Shaving Saloon in fine style, and are prepared to accomodate their customers at all hours.

Printer's Convention

The editors and publishers of Wisconsin, held a convention at Portage City, July 9th, and adopted a scale of prices for advertising, passed resolutions in favor of advance payment of Subscription and transient advertising, and transacted such other business as was of general benefit to the craft. What say our brethren of the press, to a like Convention in Michigan? We know that, several aborative attempts have been made in this State to hold such a Convention, which does not argue well for such a proposition; yet we feel disposed to call the attention of our contemporaries to the subject, as we consider the present a favorable time to have such a gathering—the din of war being afar off, and we are lying upon our arms on the tented field, with only now and then a slight brush to keep our steel from rusting—we may lay aside all feeling politicel, and meet together as one brotherhood and consult for the common good of all. Such a Convention would result in great good, not only in a business point of view, but socially and otherwise. We therefore move that there be a "Printers' Convention" held at Jackson, on the 20th day of October next, at one o'clock P. M. How many of our brethren will "second the motion?"—Eaton County Argus.

Jackson—20th October next—set us down, Mr. Argus.

☞ The Josephine is the newest article of female attire, and is somewhat like a shanghi coat. It makes the wearer resemble the new comet—little body and tremendous tail.

Sharp.—A coquette and her lover were quarreling complete at each other. She wrote:

You men are ANGELS when you woo the maid,
But DEVILS when the marriage vow is said
The lover not to be out-done, replied:
The charge, dear girl, is easily forgiven—
We find ourselves next, instead of HEAVEN.
The girl didn't write any more.

"Why is an old maid like a sucked orange? Because she isn't worth a squeeze."

REDUCTION IN R. R. FARE.—By the new 'Passenger Tariff' Tickets can be obtained of J. A. Rice, Agent, at the M. & N. I. R. R. Office in this city, at the following reduced rates:

To Destroy Canada Thistle.

In answer to the inquiry of a subscriber as to the best method to be employed for the destruction of Canada thistles, we have several responses, of which the substance is given.

Mr. C. F. Conrad, of Trenton, writes that he has destroyed all the patches of Canada thistles, on his farm by putting on a pair of gloves, and taking hold of these plants with his hands as close to the ground as possible and pulling them out. In drawing them up they generally break off below the surface. They are not apt to show their heads after this treatment, especially if they are pulled before they come into bloom. Docks and Elders, are served in the same way and burned. [This we consider rather a back breaking opperation.—The pulling of the thistles may be much facilitated by the use of a pair of long handled pincers, which enables the workman to pull them more rapidly than he can by hand. The process is too tedious for a large tract of land though it is very thorough.]

Mr. C. H. Palmer, of Castleton Barry Co., writes that he has found the pulling process the most thorough His soil is a sandy loam, mellow and deep. He found them in the corner of a field which he broke up in 1857. Some of the thistles were in flower at the time he pulled them up.—Some of them made a second growth in the fall, and during the next season but the pulling process was repeated so that in the spring of 1855, when the piece was plowed for corn only three very weakly stalks could be found.

R. Hulbert of west Berlin St. Clair Co., writes that, about half an acre of Canada thistles grew on his farm as thick as they could stand. Salt and every other remedy which was known was tried without avail. A neighbor having tried plowing them up Mr. Hulberts' folks tried plowing also, and the piece was plowed every 4 weeks, during the summer, and after two summers, no thistles were to be found on the lot, and a good crop is now growing where the thistles were.

Where thistles stand thick and over a large extent of ground, it would hardly be practicable to attempt to get them out by hand. The nature of the Canada Thistle is to send up shoots from every point of its spreading roots, which lies within the influence of the soil, whenever it is cut The seeds too germinate very freely.—The plants should be cut down close to the ground first when the flower is begining to change to seed, and the stalks burnt. Then the piece of land infested should be plowed, and as soon as it is seen that the roots are alive and about to send up new shoots, the plowing should be repeated. Where it is inconvenien to plow the ground the thistles should be cut, and sheep turned into it to pasture having first sprinkled the cut plants plentfully with salt. This is not so sure or effective as the plowing but it has been attended with complete success where it has been tried.

Mr. I. Shepard of Livonia writes that several ago, while in New York, his father directed him plow a piece of land infested with thistles, and which had been seeded with oats; but plowing had no effect the thistles coming up as thick as ever. He was then set to mow them, and the next year they were very sensibly diminished in rankness and luxuriance, steady cutting them while in blossom, caused them to disappear in one or two years.—Mich. Farmer.

In conclusion with the above we would call the attention of our villiage Authorities to a small patch of Canada Thistles in our village, just east of Bills and Andersons new block on Chicago street.

They were sown there some years ago from the unpacking of some goods enclosed in hay or straw containing the reeds. They have been carefully mowed while in blossom, every year since, but have continued gradually to spread, and it is high time some more effectual means were taken to eradicate so dangerous an enemy from our midst.

With a little neglect they will become so spread as to be nearly inadicable. The country is as yet happily free from them and we should regret that it should be indebted to the village of Tecumseh for so great a curse. We will say no more, hoping that a word to the wise is sufficient.—ED HERALD.

Black Tooth and 'Hog Cholera

EDS. RURAL:—I am not much in the habit of troubling you with my epistles, but I write to suggest an inquiry, or remedy for diseases to which swine flesh is heir. I have been aware these 17or18 years of a disease among swine called the Black Tooth, but until within a few years the symptons invariably were a weakness or paralysis of the hind parts, so that the animal would walk on its fore legs and drag its hind parts. The remedy was to knock out the teeth, and the hog would recover in a day or two. Several years ago a neighbor lost three thrifty shoats after having them nearly wintered, by what he called the "PANTS." They were taken suddenly sick, commenced panting, as if short of breath, and continued getting worse for a day or two till they died. The next winter he had another attacked in the same way, and when he was describing it to me the idea suggested itself to my mind that possibly it might be another phase of the black-tooth. I examined it, found its breath very offensive and a good supply of black teeth, which we knocked out and the hog got well. Since then there have been quite a number of hogs attacked in our neighborhood in the same manner, but in every case they have on examination been found to have black teeth, and on these being removed in season, they have invariably recovered.

I see a paragraph going the rounds of the papers to the effect that most of the shoats brought from the West and peddled out in the Eastern States have died of the hog cholera. Now if strychnine is the cause of the hog cholera, I would like to know by what kind of hocus pocus the western hog speculators are able to retard the effects of a drug so prompt in its action as strychnine, long enough to transport them a thousand miles and peddle them out, unless they send them down by telegraph? I see by the papers, also, that one man had opened his hogs, which had died of the hog cholera, and found their throats swelled entirely shut. If, now, that is hog cholera I would hazard the suggestion that the hog cholera is nothing more nor less than the 'pants' or black tooth and that on the removal of the teeth in the first stages of the disease, the the hogs will recover. At any rate the experiment is worth trying; try it and see. J. O. W.

IMPURE SEEDS FROM THE PATENT OFFICE.—Mr. Bronson Murry, of Ottawa, Ill., sends the Prairie Farmer seven different varieties of foul seeds taken from one package of "Brentna Wheat." They are chess, chockle wild peas, a bean, a burr, oats and smut. In the package are also grown wheat and two varieties of weevil, and the wheat itself is musty, and a spring variety, though it is marked "sow in Autumn." We agree with Mr. M. in the opinion that the Patent Office Commissioner must be mistaken in the qualification of some of his employes. Such 'choice' seed can be no requisition, and its distribution must prove injurous rather than beneficial to agriculturists.

☞ The Second Annul Fair of the Northern Lenawee Agricultural Society, will be held at Tecumseh, Sept. 10th 1857.

☞ Does Wheat turn to Chess? is a question for some Farmer to give his experience upon.

Don't permit Canada Thistles, et omne genus, to seed on your farm or by the roadside.

She then commenced taking your Pills, which soon cured her by expelling large quantities of worms (dead) from her body. They afterwards cured her and our two children of bloody dysentery. One of our neighbors had it bad, and my wife cured him with two doses of your Pills. While others around us paid from five to twenty dollars doctors' bills, and lost much time, without being cured entirely even then. Such a medicine as yours, which is actually good and honest, will be prized here.

GEO. J. GRIFFIN, Postmaster.

Indigestion and Impurity of the Blood

From Rev. J. V. Himes, Pastor of Advent Church, Boston.

DR. AYER: I have used your Pills with extraordinary success in my family and among those I am called to visit in distress. To regulate the organs of digestion and purify the blood they are the very best remedy I have ever known, and I can confidently recommend them to my friends. Yours, J. V. HIMES.

WARSAW, WYOMING Co., N. Y., Oct. 24, 1855.

DEAR SIR: I am using your Cathartic Pills in my practice, and find them an excellent purgative to cleanse the system, and purify the fountains of the blood.

JOHN G. MACHAM, M. D.

Erysipelas, Scrofula, King's Evil, Tetter, Tumors, and Salt Rheum.

From a Forwarding Merchant of St. Louis, Feb. 4, 1856.

DR. AYER: Your Pills are the paragon of all that is great in medicine. They have cured my little daughter of ulcerous sores upon her hands, and feet that had proved incurable for years. Her mother had long grievous by afflicted with blotches and pimples on her skin and in her hair. After our child was cured, she also tried your Pills, and they have cured her. ASA HORRIDGE.

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and Gout.

From the Rev. Dr. Hawks, of the Episcopal Epis. Church.

PULASKI HOUSE, SAVANNAH, GA., Jan. 5, 1856.

HONORED SIR: I should be ungrateful for the relief your skill has brought me were I not to make it known. A cold overheated me two months ago, and brought on excruciating neuralgic pains, which ended in chronic rheumatism. Notwithstanding I had the best of physicians, the disease grew worse and worse, until, by the counsel of your excellent agent in Baltimore, Dr. Mackenzie, I tried your Pills. Their effects were slow, but sure. By persevering in the use of them I am now entirely well.

Respectfully yours, ELIZA HOUSE, late of Bay, S. Inc., 5 Dec., 1856.

DR. AYER: I have been entirely cured by your Pills of Rheumatic Gout—a painful disease that had afflicted me for years. VINCENT SLIDELL.

For Dropsy, Plethora, or kindred Complaints, requiring an active purge, they are an excellent remedy.

For Costiveness or Constipation, and as a Dinner Pill, they are agreeable and effectual.

Fits, Suppression, Paralysis, Inflammation, and even Deafness, and Partial Blindness, have been cured by the alterative action of these Pills.

Most of the pills in market contain Mercury, which, although a valuable remedy in skilful hands, is dangerous in a public pill, from the dreadful consequences that frequently follow its incautious use. These contain no mercury or mineral substance whatever.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

COLDS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, INFLUENZA, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION,

and for the relief of consumptive patients in advanced stages of the disease.

We need not speak to the public of its virtues Throughout every town, and almost every hamlet of the American States, its wonderful cures of pulmonary complaints are made it already known. Nay, few are the families in any civilized country on this continent without some personal experience of its effects; and fewer yet the communities any where which have not among them some living trophy of its victory over the subtle and dangerous diseases of the pulmonary organs. While it is the most powerful antidote yet known to man for the formidable and dangerous diseases of the pulmonary organs, it is also the pleasantest and safest remedy that can be employed for infants and young persons. Parents should have it in store against the insidious enemy that steals upon them unprepared. We have abundant grounds to believe the CHERRY PECTORAL saves more lives by the consumptions it prevents than those it cures. Keep it by you, and cure your colds while they are curable, or neglect them until no human skill can master the inexorable tanker that, fastened on the vitals, eats your life away All know the wonderful facility of lung disorders, and as they know too the virtues of this remedy, we need not do more than to assure them it is still more the best it can be. We spare no cost, no care, no toil to produce it the most perfect possible, and thus afford those who rely on it the best agent which our skill can furnish for their cure.

HOWARD ASSOCIATION PHILADELPHIA.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

TO all persons afflicted with Sexual Disease such as SPERMATORRHŒA, SEMINAL WEAKNESS, IMPORTANCE, GONORRHŒA, GLEET, SYPHILIS, the Vice of ONANISM, or Self Abuse, &c., &c.,

The HOWARD ASSOCIATION, in view of the awful destruction of human life, caused by Sexual diseases, and the deceptions practised upon the unfortunate victims of such diseases by Quacks, have directed their Consulting Surgeon, as a CHARITABLE ACT worthy of their name, to give MEDICAL ADVICE GRATIS, to all persons thus afflicted, who apply by letter, with a description of their condition, (age, occupation, habits of life, &c.,) and in cases of extreme poverty and suffering, to FURNISH MEDICINES FREE OF CHARGE.

The Howard Association is a benevolent Institution, established by special endowment, for the relief of the sick and distressed, afflicted with "Virulent and Epidemic Diseases." It has now a surplus of means, which the Directors have voted to expend in advertising the above notice. It is needless to add that the Association commands the highest Medical skill of the age, and will furnish the most approved modern treatment

Just Published, by the Association, a Report on Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, the vice of Onanism, Masturbation or Self Abuse, and other Diseases of the Sexual Organs, by the Consulting Surgeon, which will be sent by mail, (in a sealed envelop.) FREE OF CHARGE, on the receipt of Two Stamps for postage.

Address, Dr. GEO. R. CALHOUN, Consulting Surgeon, Howard Association, No 2 South NINTH Street, Philadelphia, Pa. By order of the Directors.

EZRA D. HARTWELL, President.

GEO. FAIRCHILD, Secretary. 340y

A Retired Physician, 75 years of age having lost his Father, two Brothers, Daughter, Son-in-law, Nephews and Nieces, by that dreadful disease, CONSUMPTION, and suffering with a COUGH himself, determined to visit the East Indies, Egypt and Japan, where he discovered a Preparative and Certain Cure for Colds, Coughs, Bronchitis, CONSUMPTION Nervous Debility and Asthma. His cough was cured immediately; he returned, cured his Relatives, who inherited the disease, and in connection with his son have employed it in their practice, curing thousands of cases considered hopeless by others. For the purpose of rescuing as many of his suffering fellow beings as possible he is sending the Recipe to all who wish it for 10 cents; 3 of it to pay the postage, and the balance printing.

Patent Medicines.

A Medicine that Never Debilitates.

DR. SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR, OR LIVER REMEDY.

HAS ALL THE GOOD QUALITIES OF A Purgative medicine, answering the purposes of any Cathartic without the debilitating effects experienced from most purgatives It acts slowly and gently, but surely, moving the bowels to carry off all the secreted matter, at the same time, stimulating the Liver to a proper performance of its functions

The Invigorator cures the Sick Headache, Take one or two tea-spoonsful at each attack and it will soon disappear. For an overloaded stomache, or when food rises or sours, take the Invigorator after eating, and it will not prove disagreeable or oppressive. For Heartburn, Palpitation, or difficult breathing take a teaspoonful once or twice daily. For Loss of Appetite, Langu or Listlessness, the medicine is invaluable It will restore the appetite and make the food digest well.—Nightmare take a teaspoonful on retiring, and the demons of dream-land will all be fairies. After eating a heavy dinner, take a dose of Invigorator and it will relieve all oppression or fullness. The Invigorator is a Liver Remedy of unequalled virtue, acting directly on that organ, curing Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, Dysentery, Piles Worms, and all Female Obstructions, for which it has no equal.

We know there is nothing now before the American public, prepared with such skill by a scientific man, particularly for diseases of the Liver, as Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver Remedy. It has attained a reputation second to no other article in the world, simply because it rests on its own merit To convince all by trial that it is all its proprietors claim it to be, if any of our readers are suffering from such diseases as are described in Dr. Sanford's advertisement, we know of no remedy that will so surely cure as the Invigorator.

There has lately been brought to our notice a medicine that seems to possess wonderful, curative and healing proprieties in diseases of the Liver, stomache and Digestive Organs. It came to us with so many testimonials in its favor that we have noted its effects in some of the worst cases of confirmed debility, caused by deranged liver, and in every instance the effect was to relieve or give a permanent cure. Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver remedy is what we refer to. We always have been credulous about cures by patent medicines, but we are convinced that this medicine, for family use, is not over rated by the host of recommendations it has. Our advice is, for all troubled with Indigestion, Debility or Bowel Complaint, to get a bottle and try it; our word for it, relief will be experienced.

BLESSINGS To The Invalids who use Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, for it will relieve them of their pains as soon as it is taken into their stomach. Pain and misery cannot exist where the Invigorator is used, for it will as surely drive them away, as daylight will banish darkness, of this there can be no doubt to those who try it, for it carries conviction with every dose taken. Another evidence is the thousands of certificates from those who use it or have been cured by it.—Try one bottle, if it does not benefit, then we are mistaken.

Bickley's New Romance!

The undersigned has just published No. 1 of a new and intensely interesting Romance, from the pen of C. P Bickley, Esq., Author of the "Mysteries of the Queen City;" "Garnelle," "The Rival Knights," etc. entitled,

LIFE'S WEBB.

This work is destined to create a greater sensation than any work of fiction ever published in America. In skillful development of plot and vividness of description, it is fully equal to the greatest efforts of G. W. M. Reynolds or Alexander Dumas

The scene is laid in the great American Metropolis—New York; and the Characters introduced are drawn from real life.

They will be published in Monthy numbers (of 32 pages each) and when completed will form a volume of 192 pages

GREAT WESTERN READY PAY

B. J. BIDWELL.

Chicago Street, Tecumseh,

I am now opening a Large, and General Assortment of

Dry Goods and Groceries,

and shall be receiving from week to week through the Season, any Goods that may be wanted, from the Eastern Manufacturers and Jobbers of

New York, Boston,

and Other Cities in the East.

I have tried during Nineteen Years of my life the various modes of doing business

Firstly for Cash.
Secondly on Short Credit.
Thirdly, had to take Long Credit, Orders and Accounts.

Lastly, I have been compelled to wait for payment of Goods sold on Six Months time long enough for a man to visit California, get rich, and return, before payment could be forced or coaxed.

Now I wish to say, to my numerous friends and patrons, that I am thoroughly convinced that the mode of buying goods on time is both injurious to the buyer and seller.

I will hereafter Sell for Ready pay, at such prices that will defy all competion in the Town, State, or the United States.

No one should buy a dollars worth of Goods without calling at the

Great Western Cash Store

and get the prices. Some are so unfortunate as to be compelled to trade at long credit stores—to those I would say, Call and see what you can save by having the Ready, and something as good, to use where you please.

Call one and all, I wish to see the tips of your countenance, and the cash from your pockets.

Belle Brandon.

'Neath a tree by the margin of the wood-land
Whose spreading leafy boughs sweep the ground,
With a path leading thither o'er the prairie,
When silence hung her night-garb around;
There often I have wandered in the evening,
When the summer winds are fragrant on the sea,
There I saw the little beauty Belle Brandon
And we met 'neath the old arbor Tree.

Belle Brandon was a birthling of the mountain,
In freedom she sported on her wing,
And the life current of the red man
Tinged her veins from a far distant spring;
She loved her humble dwelling on the prairie,
And her guiltless, happy heart clung to me,
And I loved the little beauty Belle Brandon
And we both loved the old Arbor Tree.

On the trunk of the aged treeI carved them,
Our names on the sturdy form remain,
But I now repair in sorrow to its shelter
And mourn to the wild winds my pain;
Oh! I sit there in solitude repining
For the beauty dream that night brought to me,
Death has wed the little beauty Belle Brandon
And she sleeps neath the old Arbor Tree.

☞ The writer of following, Miss Emma Alice Brown, is called the most remarkable of the rising female poets of America.

The Old Maid.

Alas! alas! for summers flown,
For the beautiful joys that I have known!
Oh, for the hours, sublime with youth!
Wo! for the ruined shrine of truth!
Holding my hand, and smoothing my hair,
Kissing my eyes, and my forehead fair—
All the sweets of all the hours—
All the birds, and bees, and flowers—
All the suns that ever shone—
All the winds that have ever blown—
All the dim seas that dreaming lie,
Under the arch of the summer sky—
All the glorious morns that wake—
All the splendor of hues that break,
On the starry coasts of evé divine,
O'erflown with sunset's purple wine—
Were never half, nor half so bright
As my own heart's Mabel is to-night!
So he talked while the shadows fleet
Ran under the woods and over the wheat.
Alas! alas! for the summers gone,
And the beautiful guise my youth put on!
Willie is married, and I am alone,
Counting my heart-breaks, one by one.
Willie is married to Nellie Gray,
And I am alone in the world to-day;
The saddest thing that was ever born,
A dear old maid, forsaken and lorn;
Two children frolic at Willie's knee,
And one, the fairest, he calls for me;
She has my girlhood's eyes and mouth,
But not the sorrow that stunned my youth;
Oh, Willie! when countless years have flown,
And God shall roll the sorrowful stone
From the grave of the dead past, and the light
Of his awful justice makes all thing bright—
When starry crowned, and glorified,
We dwell in His presence side by side—
Where the flowers of the soul fade not away.
Will you love me best, or Nellie Gray?

Western Court Etiquette.

The judge of a Western court decided a point adverse to a certain lawyer. The lawyer was stubborn, and insisted on it that the court was wrong.

"I tell you that I am right!" yelled the court, with flashing eyes.

"I tell you, you are not right!" retorted the counsel

"I am right!" reiterated the court.

"I say you ain't!" persisted the counsel.

"Crier," yelled the judge "I adjourn the court for ten minutes," and jumping from the bench, he pitched into the counsel, and after a lively little fight, placed him hors du combat, after which business was resumed, but it was not long before another misunderstanding arose.

"Crier," said the court, "we will adjourn this time for twenty minutes," and he was about taking off his coat, when the counsel said:

"Never mind, judge, keep on your coat—the p'int is yielded—my thumb's out of j'int, and I've sprained my shoulder."

A KENTUCKY GIRL.—When the steamer Alida was sinking from her collision with Fashion on Tuesday night, and the passengers in confusion, some preparing to secure a safe retreat from the sinking craft, and some in the water making their way to the land, a girl of about seventeen summers was standing on the guard intently contemplating the scene, and looking anxiously towards the shore. A young man, in a rush of gallantry, stepped up to her and said, "Miss if you will put yourself under my protection I will convey you safely to the shore."—'Thank you,' replied the young heroine, 'but you need not trouble yourself. I am only waiting for the crowd to get out of the way, when I can take care of myself and reach the bank.' Soon the crowd cleared the space, and the young lady plunged into the water and swam to the opposite side of the bank with apparent ease and without the least perceptible fear.—Padyca Times.

A Legend.

BY B. F. TAYLOR.

There is a very old and beautiful story that has formed the staple for poems in many tongues that we wish we could tell.

It is of one sailing on the sea, in a sleep without a dream. The ship was wrecked and shattered, and yet he slept

The waves bore him like an infant in a cradle, upon the plank whereon he lay, and when he awoke, it was with music, and upon a couch of flowers.

The shore was strange yet lovely, and thronged with thousands who proclaimed him king. It seemed as if they had awaited him, waif tho' he was, for there was a throne without an occupant, and royal robes for his arraying.

All human wills seemed merged in his, and glory shone around him, even as the sun of that fair, unclouded clime.

At length; there came to him a reverend man who told him the time would come when exiled from his kingdom, and powerless as he came there would "none so poor to do him reverence." But, continued the aged sage, beyond the clouds that skirt this lovely land, lie unseen islands bare and drear; no fountains sparkle and no flowers perfume; no music, but the wail of winds and waves; no shelter but the shadow of a rock.

Thither will they banish thee, and there thou must make thy inevitable home. But now, thou art supremely blest; slaves do thy bidding, and gold strews thy pathway like sand. So, seek that island out; cause the rock to be smitten, that it may gush with living water; send fragrant flowers from thy gardens and spicy trees from thy forests; let the amaranth be transplanted, and the palm shed pleasant shade, till the wilderness shall be glad for them, and "the desert blossom as the rose!" Build there a royal mansion and fill it with all things pure and beautiful, that surround thee now; so shalt thou have a Paradise at last, and go rejoicing into exile.

The king was wise, and while he cherished the realm he ruled, yet sought the island, and colonized, as it were, the half of his heart. Spring was persuaded to come that way, and she hung her robe on the trees he had planted, and left her breath on the gale. The music of birds, and fountains, and winds among the leaves, floated round the new palace he had builded; but nothing of all this had he ever beheld.

Years went on, and the old royal glories grew dim, and the crown was tarnished, and, there was another wreck, a new king came sleeping to the shore, and he that had ruled in a palace, was not suffered so much as a shelter, for he was an exile, as the sage had prophesied. But he went not with a heavy heart, for sometimes, when the wind blew from the unseen shore, it had borne to him the fragrance of orange and balm, and so he knew that his gardens were growing beatiful for his coming. And he laid off the purple, like one disrobing for pleasant dreams, and put down the sceptre as if it had been a burden, and went away to his unseen home with a 'good by' on his lip, but a smile on his eye.

And though none have seen the Eden he dwells in, yet sailors driven out to sea, declare that sometimes sweet odors have been wafted across the deck from an unseen land, and by it they know that the gardens of the Exile are near.

"As when to them who sail
Beyond the Cape of Hope and now are passed
Mozambique, off at sea north-east winds blow
Sabean odors from the spicy shore
Of Araby the Blest—with such delay
Well pleased they slack there course, and many a league
Pleased with the grateful scent, old ocean smiles."

Krautsalaat's wife has a great fancy for country life, and insists on keeping a hen in the back yard, as Hood says, "to furnish milk, butter and eggs" for the family. The other day, she came to Krautsalaat in great trepidation.

"My dear," said she, 'the hen commenced to set. I took the eggs away from her and she is now setting in one corner of the coal-bin on an old axe-head."

"Well my dear, responded Krautsalaat in his subdued, billious way, "if the hen is setting upon an old axe-head, it seems quite likely that she may hatch-it!"

An exchange wants to know what more precious offering can be laid upon the altar of a man's heart than the first love of a pure, earnest and an affectionate girl, with an undivided interest in eight corner lots, and fourteen three story houses?

It is not round sentences, but pointed ones, that stick in the memory.—

So Many Calls.

It was a brisk, clear evening in the latter part of December, when Mr. A. returned from his counting-house to the comforts of a bright coal fire, and warm arm-chair, in his parlor at home. He changed his heavy boots for slippers, drew around him the folds of his evening gown, and then, lounging back in the chair, looked up to the ceiling, and about, with an air of satisfaction. Still there was a cloud on his brow. What could be the matter with Mr. A.? To tell the truth, he had that afternoon received in his counting-room the agent of one of the principal religious charities of the day, and had been warmly urged to double his last year's subscription; and the urging had been pressed by statements and arguments to which he did not know well how to reply. "People think," soliloquized he to himself, "that I am made of money, I believe. This is the fourth object this year for which I have been requested to double my subscription; and this year has been one of heavy family expenses—building and fitting up this house—carpets, curtains—no end to the new things to be bought—I really do not see how I am to give a cent more in charity. Then there are the bills for the girls and boys—they all say they have twice as much now as before we came into this house.—Wonder if I did right in building it?" And Mr. A., glanced up and down the ceiling and around on the costly furniture and looked into the fire in silence. He was tired, harrassed and drowsy; his head began to swim, and his eyes closed—he was sleeping. In his sleep he thought he heard a tap at the door; he opened it, and there stood a plain, poor-looking man, who, in a voice singularly low and sweet, asked for a few moments' conversation with him. Mr. A. asked him into the parlor, and drew him a chair near the fire. The stanger looked attentively around, and turning to Mr. A., presented him with a paper. "It is your last year's subscription to missions," said he. "You know all of the wants of that cause that can be told to you. I called to see if you had anything to do with it."

This was said in the same low and quiet voice as before; but, for some reason, unaccountable to himself, Mr. A. was more embarrassed by the plain, poor, unpretending man, than he had ever been in the presence of any one. It was some time before he could reply at all, and then, in a hurried and embarassed manner, he began the same excuse which appeared so satisfactory to him the afternoon before—the hardness of the times, the difficulty of collecting money, etc.

The stranger quietly surveyed the spacious apartment, with its many eligancies and luxuries, and without any comment, took from the merchant the paper he had given, but immediately presented him with another.

"This is your subscription to the tract society; have you anything to add to it? You know how much it has been doing, and how much it now desires to do, if Christians would only furnish the means. Do you not feel called upon to add to it?"

Mr. A. was very uneasy under this appeal, but there was something in the mild manner of the stranger that restrained him; but he answered that, although he regretted it exceedingly, his circumstances were such, that he could not this year conveniently add to any of his charities.

The stranger received back the paper without any reply, but immediately presented in its place the subscription of the Bible Society, and in a few clear, forcible words, reminded him of its well-known claims; and again requested him to add something to his donations. Mr. A. became impatient.

"Have I not said," he replied, "that I can do nothing more for any charity than I did last year? There seems to be no end to the calls upon us in these days,"

The stranger took back the paper, arose, and fixing his eye on his companion, said in a voice that thrilled though his soul:

"One year ago to-night, you thought your daughter lay dying; you could not sleep for agony. Upon whom did you call that night?"

The merchant started and looked up. There seemed a change to have passed over the whole form of the visitor, whose eye was fixed upon him with a calm, intense, penetrating expression, that awed and subdued him. He drew back, covered his face, and made no reply.

"Five years ago," said the stranger, "when you lay at the brink of the grave, and thought if you died then, you should leave a family of helpless children entirely unprovided for, do you remember how you prayed? Who saved you then?"

The stranger paused for an answer, but there was a dead silence. The merchant bent forward as one entirely overcome, and rested his head on the seat before him.

The stranger drew yet nearer, and said in a still lower and more impressive tone:

"Do you remember, fifteen years since, that time when you felt yourself so lost, so helpless, so hopeless; when you spent days and nights in prayer; when you would give the whole world for one hour's assurance that your sins were forgiven you? Who listened to you then?"

"It was my God and Savior!" said the merchant, with a sudden burst of remorseful feeling; "O, yes, it was he!"

"And has he ever complained of being called on too often!" inquired the stranger, in a voice of reproachful sweetness; "Say," he added "are you willing to begin this night, and ask no more of him, if he, from this night, will ask no more of you?"

"O, never, never!" said the merchant, throwing himself at his feet; but as he spoke these words, the figure seemed to vanish, and he awoke with his whole soul stirred within him.

"O, my Savior, what have I been saying? what have I been doing?" he exclaimed. "Take all, take everything! What is all that I have, to what thou hast done for me?

Dead-Alive.

The New York Express is a regular old curiosity-shop, for extraordinary articles in the way of news. It gives out vagaries which never could possibly occur to a brain not in the systematic employ of that office. Its very ideality is hepasised—turned to stone, and rendered fossil. Only think of exhuming Schuyler after so long a time, and making him "an object of interest." The Express is a regular "king of spades" at digging a fellow up, and having had immense fun with Schuyler in his life time cannot have to much of a good thing, but must needs masticate his bones. A reissue of Schuyler, is an appropriate notion, an over issue, would of course, be in direct character. Here is the article.

Mrs. Robert Schuyler, (widow,) better known as Mrs. Spicer, the widow of the celebrated financier, has erected a sort of castellod cottage on Saratoga Lake; about half a mile from the great place of resort the Lake House—where "all the world" go to drive, or to dine on the famous "fried potatoes." Mrs Schuyler having planted a mansion of some pretentions near a resort so fashionable, all the tourists in the United States will of course drive to take a look at her—and for sixty or ninety days in the year she must expect people to be almost looking into her windows.

The selection of a spot to build upon in so conspicuous a place, has started the public gossip into all sorts of romances, fictions and fancies, and while there is an earnest inquiry, "where did the money come from?" there is not a less earnest assertion that Robert Schuyler is not dead. What gives strong interest to the whole affair, is a little stone building some one hundred feet from the mansion, with high windows, up out of sight on foot, erected nominally for a Roman Catholic Chapel, to which rumor adds—I do not for I have never been down to see—that there is a subterranean passage from the house.—The workmen have been "pumped" and "repumped," and some of them hint, if not give out, that Robert Schuyler is there, yet alive, and that when anybody comes into the house, Mr. Schuyler runs under ground to the chapel, and gets into his coffin, "dead!"—to which his ghostly appearance when living, would add an air of probability. The story is very current and is the natural result of his widow's erecting a conspicious mansion in a conspicious place. There seems to be a very lively impression in consequence of the story and the mansion, that Mr. Schuyler is not dead, but yet liveth.

"See here, my friend, you are drunk."

"To be sure I am, and have been for 3 years. You see, my brother and I are on a temperance mission; he lectures and I set a frightful example!"

In courting, three hard squeezes are better than fifty soft words. Try it.

"I'm off for a watering place." as Sandy Pacth said when he jumped over Niagara Falls

What kind of a tree never sprouts but grows smaller as it grows older?

Give it, eh! Its an axle tree.

A Word To The Boys.

Come, Boys, and listen to your uncle. You have now arrived at an age when your must begin to think of doing something for yourselves. The first peice of advice I have for you is, to do everything well, which you undertake. There is but little danger of your being too particular in this respect. A boy who is careful to draw a straight line on his slate, will be very likely to make a straight line through life. There is no position in which you will not be called upon to be as exact as possible. Step into a jeweller's shop and see how careful the workman must be in finishing up the article he holds in his hands.—Visit a ship yard, and the man with the broadaxe must learn to hew on the line or be dismissed. You think of being clerk. Well, remember that a mistake there, is little less than a crime. I never saw a man who was very particular about his affairs that was not successful. How exact is the military officer in the command of a body of men. A clumsy sailor will never rise to the command of a ship.

But there is one great danger which besets many young men at the present day. It is the disposition to avoid all solid improvement, and take up with subjects that require no thought, and which serve as mere excitements to the mind. Your older friends tell you that boys were very fast boys long before you were born; but they never made solid and useful men. Very few of them ever lived to be forty years old. Nobody ever trusted them.—They never filled any important office or station. They usually became small men because they had no capital in their heads with which to work out a living. Out of fifty of that class of fast boys I do not know of one who ever accomplished much. As you sow, so shall you reap. The boy who spends his hours late and early at the card table, bowling alley, or tavern bar room, is learning nothing useful, but much that is injurious. Listen to such men as Amos Lawrence, Thomas H. Benton, Daniel Webster, Benjamin Franklin and George Washington, and they will all tell you that they avoided all these things, and owed their greatness to their attention in early life to what would be useful to them.

This may be a hard lesson for you, but it must be studied, and the earlier in life you acquire it, the better will your prospects be for a successful career.—Transcript and Eclectic.

Strange Freak of a Young Girl Stealing a Baby.

A strange abduction case has recently come to light that involves several very extraordinary features, and as there is a baby in the case, we give it for the benefit of and as a caution to mothers. Last Tuesday afternoon, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Roth, a child ten years of age, took the baby, which is about eight months old, out on avenue A. to give it the benefit of the fresh air.—The child was accosted by a young woman who asked her to buy some soda crackers for her in a grocery store, and that she would hold the infant until her return.—The little girl, not suspecting anything wrong, did as she was required, but on returning from the store could find no trace of the baby or the strange young woman. She ran, crying, up and down the streets, and though other persons joined in the search, the missing infant could nowhere be found. The parents soon learned their loss, and every effort was made by them to discover their babe. Last Saturday the well nigh distracted father received a letter informing him that a baby was in the possession of a young woman in Strattonport near Flushing, on Long Island, and it would be well for him to see the child. Mr. Roth accordingly went to Strattonport, and found his infant fat and rosy in the care of one Bertha Bushkill, a comely young female of about sixteen.

The father brought his child home, and had the girl arrested on the charge of abduction. Yesterday she was brought before Justice Wood at the Essex Police Court, and on being questioned, stated that she was not married, but had given birth to a child some seven months since, which was immediately taken from her and put out to nurse in Houston street. She longed to see her child, and on the day in question went to New York to discover its whereabouts. On seeing Mr. Roth's infant she concluded it was her own, and obtained possession of it in the manner described. It is possible Bertha is slightly deranged, and the magistrate put her in charge of an officer to see what truth there was in her representation.—N. Y. Herald.

The Snow Fort.

It is pleasant to look, in memory's book,
Though we sigh for the days of old,
To dream again by each childish face,
When play was life-wealth untold;
And, such a temple perchance I know,
Wherein worshiped be h good and fit,
Twas a fortress of snow built long ago,
On the brow, of a pine capped hill;

The pearl flakes fell, with a witching spell,
Unstirred by the wintry winds,
And, as thoughts half breathed by music wreathed
They cumbered the swaying limbs;
When a shout of glee rang merrily
From craggy rock, to dell,
Hurrah for sport let's build a fort
By the pine trees, on the hill;

The balls we rolled till fingers cold
Made many an urchin cry,
E're we hailed with delight, the bastions white
And towers, piled up so high,
No banner of stars, and stripes had we,
Of patriotism, to tell.
But an apron, whose hue was red and blue
On a beanpole waived as well;

O, twas glorious fun, when lessons were done,
To flee to its icy walls,
And woe to the one, that dared to come
In range, of our mimic balls,
But boys are ever surprisingly clever
At mischief; and what did they;
But sift the snow, on the girls below;
I belive, we surrrendered that day.

But frost work turret, and towers, are gone,
With others seemed all fair,
That in after years, in mirth and tears
Were built in the tearless air;
They melted away in warm spring ray,
When the river of grief was a rill,
And we sigh, as they fade, in the paste dark shade
For the forts, built on the hill;

Mrs. Cunningham 's Sister.

NIAGARA FALLS, Aug. 10.

I concluded my last by promising to tell you how Sarah, Mrs Cuaningham's oldest sister, freed heaself from her husband, and swindled his legal heirs out of his property. That unlucky individual had accumulated an estate of $25,000 or 30,000, and this it was that induced Sarah Hempstead to inveigle him into matrimony. Their first visit to Middletown—that beautiful village on the bank of the Connecticut—was not a very pleasant one, and the second was more disagreeable still. Sarah and her sister Ann soon became impatient under a restraint imposed by the social condition of Middletown and their eccentricities speedily excluded them from all association with those to whom the husband of the former had introduced his wife and sister. On the second visit, in the autumn after the marriage, Srah was uneasy and discontented and finally induced her husband to dispose of his property in Middletown, and take passage with her for New York, in a vessel of which he was the owner. He had been ill for some time with a wasting sickness, and his mother who had become greatly alarmed at his symptons and his complaints at increased suffering after taking a certain medicine which his wife was constantly administering, urgently remonstrated against his going in the vessel. But Sarah, who was a woman of strong will and determined character, overcame all resistance, and they departed together without attendants or companions of any kind, except the crew of the vessel. She was nearly a week reaching New York, and her husband died on the passage.—Ann had remained in Brooklyn during this time, having, it was said, certain domestic engagements to look after, growing out of her free-and-easy mode of life, shortly after the marriage of her sister.

In due time an heir to the deceased husband's estate was produced, and Sarah obtained possession of the immense property.

Of course, it would be impossible, at this late day, to ascertain the truth in respect to the suspicions entertained by the mother-in-law of Sarah in connection with this transaction; but her impression of the guilt of the woman amounted to actual conviction. She persisted in charging the death of her son upon his wife so long as she lived, and always maintained that the child which was presented to inherit her son's property was not the offspring of her son and his wife, but was the fruit of an illicit amour, in which Ann was known to have been engaged.

A man named Joe Miller was arrested at Wheeling last week with $1,000 in counterfeit money in his possession, on the "Chippewa Bank," Mis.; "North Western Bank," Wheeling, and "Farmers & Drovers Bank," Wanesburg.

Look out for Spaish "quarters," &c., as a movement is on foot in the eastern cities to take for goods at only their intrinsic value (20 cts) after September 12th.

On the 5th of August, harvesting was going on quite briskly in the southern and middle counties of England, and the wheat market was generally dull.

☞ Our atmosphere for a few days past has been bright, but with the peculiar mellowness of autumn. It is not difficult to divine that we are on the eve of September, and that the season of fruits and crops is upon us. Everything however, continues to look green and beautiful, and the earth has not been parched even for a day.—Toledo Blade.

State Teacher's Association at Adrian.

We were able to be in attendance at the State Teacher's association at Adrian last week only a part of two days, out of the three during which it was in session.

It was as we had anticipated an occasion of much interest, and was very well attended. Dr. Stone President of the Kalamazoo Theological Institute presided with much dignity and ability, and the course of essay and dtbate was well sustained, eliciting much valuable thought connected with the varous subjects thus brought before the convention: In all there must have been in attendance, of Teachers, and educational men some two hundred members of the association from different parts of the State, and it cannot be doubted that the impetus thus given to the cause will diffuse itself widely and beneficially to its furthermost bounds.

Among the subjects eliciting considerable discussion, was that of Township Districts, being the subject of an essay by Prof F. Hubbard of Adrian—and the influence of a cultivation of the Fine arts upon Primary, and especially Female Education, being the subject of an essay by Prof. J. E. Boyd of Monroe. Among those who addressed the association were Dr. Mahan of Jackson; Dr. Stone of Kalamazoo; Hon. Ira Mahew Sup't. of Public Instruction and Prof. J. M. Gregory, editor of the Mich. Journal of Education.

TECUMSEH UNION SCHOOL.—The Fall Term of Tecumseh Union School will commence on Monday the 7th day of September next under the charge of Prof. Lawton recently of Dexter, as Principal, assisted by a full and competent corps of assistants in both the male and Female Deprtments The new Buildings are now complete, and no pains will be spared by the School Board to make the course of study, and facilities for the acquisition of knowledge in this Institution inferor to none in the State.

Students from abroad will be accommodated with board in private families upon the most reasonable terms, and also with rooms, if desired, for those wishing to board themselves Prof. Lawton's reputation for scholarly attainments, and success as an instructor is already wide-spread, and a full attendance upon the coming term of the School is confidently anticipated.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Putnam's Monthly.

The September No. of Putnam is promptly received. Among its illustrated articles are Beth Gelert a Ballad—A Journey in Africa—The Camp and Field—The Husband's Friend—Our Lady—Uncle Josh—A Plea for Idleness—Love in the Country—and Witching Times continued are also worthy of notice.—Address, Messrs. Miller & Curtis, 321 Broadway N. Y. Terms $3,00 per annum.

Godey's Lady's Book.

The September No. of this popular magazine of Literature and Fashion is promptly upon our table as usual. Among its contents we would notice—The Manufacture of Silk—Uncle George, or the Family Mystery—The Lost Diamonds concluded—Instructions in Needle-work, receipts, recipes &c. Mrs. Sarah J. Hale and L. A. Godey editors. Published monthly by L. A. Godey Phila'd Terms $3,00 per annum.

Ladies' Repository.

The September No of the Repository is received and welcome. Its typographical execution and embellishment is as usual most beautiful, while its contents are such as to well sustain its high literary reputation. Dr. Clark is an editor of no ordinary ability and good taste and this magazine was never more popular, nor more deserving of popularity than it has been made under his judicious and efficient management.—Published monthly by Messrs. Swormstedt & Poe, Cincinnati O.—Terms $2,00 per annum.

The School Fellow Magazine

The September No. of this excellent monthly illustrated magazine for Boys and Girls, published by Miller & Curtis No. 321 Broadway N. Y. at $1,00 per annum is received, and justly calls for both notice and commendation at our hands. It is becoming quite a favorite among the juveniles and we predict for it an extensively increased circulation.

OHIO AND MICHIGAN.—The Ohio Farmer in an article contrasting the penurious of our State with the liberality of Nichigan, presents the following statistics of the comparative wealth of two States:

"By the census of 1850 the amount of improved land in Michigan, was a little over 1,900,000 acres; in Ohio, it was over 9,800 00 acres, or about five times as great. The cash value of farms in Michigan was nearly $52,000,000; in Ohio nearly $359,000,000, or near seven times as great. The live-stock was valued at the same time in Michigan at $8,-000,000, in round numbers; in Ohio at $44,000,000. The wheat crop of Mich. was nearly 14,500,000 bushels. The corn crop of Michigan was about 5,600,-bushels; that of Ohio was 59,000,000 bushels, or nearly ten times as great—These figures show that Ohio is many times more wealthy than Michigan; yet, while Michigan can give $100,000, to endow an Agricultural College, Ohio is too poor to give a farthing for this end."—Marietta Intelligencer.

WASHINTON, Aug. 18.

New Orleans papers to the 11th are to hand.

There had been continual rains in all parts of Louisiana yet heard from.

The Suicide of Gen. Rusk.

The Washington States of Wednesday evening gives the following additional particulars of the death of Gen. Rusk:

"A letter received in this city last evening confirms the death of Senator Rusk by suicide. It is stated that but a short time previous to the sad occurrence Senator Rusk had been out working with his men, and was heard to remark, regrettingly, that Houston and himself had heretofore been political friends, but now they were political enemies. He went to his home a short time afterward, and, while standing in the door, he placed the muzzle of his rifle to his forehead, and pulled the trigger with a string, and fell backward into the yard in the agonies of death."

An extra of the Nacogdoches Chronicle, dated the 30th ult., says:

"General Rusk has, ever since the death of his lady, suffered under a mental depression which at times bore him down beneath its weight. He has, to a great extent, secluded himself from society, and lately that despondency has been more marked and apparent to those familiar with him. A severe illness, from which he was just recovering, had prostrated him for weeks, and he was suffering greatly from a rising on the back of his neck.

On yesterday evening about 2 o'clock, his family, hearing the report of a gun and the fall of a body, ran to the spot, and found him lying dead upon the ground behind the gallery at the back of the house, with a rifle under him. A Coroner's Jury was summoned, from whose verdict we extract the following:

"The cause of his death was a gunshot (rifle,) wound on the fore part of the head, inflicted from a rifle gun held in his own hands and discharged by himself."

"No further clue can be given of this mystery. No papers or writings of the same day have been found, except a letter addressed to a gentleman in New Orleans, ordering a tombstone for his wife, with this inscription:

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

"An inventory of all his property was found in a portfolio, and the value of the same divided by the number of his children. He was buried this evening with Masonic honors. An obituary address was delivered by the Hon. W. B. Ochiltree."

The Baltimore Sun has the following concerning the probable cause of the suicide:

"It is supposed that the mind of the Senator has been much disturbed lately in consequence of some alleged connection of his brother-in-law with forgeries on the Land Department. The matter, it is surmised, preyed upon him to such an extent as to induce that terrible result."

A western pettifogger, while conducting a suit before a justice of the peace, seeing that his case was going against him broke forth in the following indignant strain—

"Go on with your abuse, yer infernal bullheads. I s'pose likely you think you are going to get the case. Well mebby yer will get it; my client can't get no justice done him afore this court. But sir we're enough for ye the hull of ye.—Me and my client can't never be intimidated nor tyrannised over! mark that! And, sir, just so sure as this court decides against us, we'll file a writ of progander, sir, and we—

Here he was interrupted by the opposite counsel, who wanted to know what he meant by a writ of progander.

"Mean?" why, sir, a writ of progander is a—a—a—its a—wal, I don't just remember the exact word, but its what'll knock thunder out of your blasted one-horse courts."

SHAMEFUL OUTRAGE.—The old Methodist church in Lynchburg, on Sunday night last, was the theatre of shameful outrage. It is thus noticed in the Courier:

It appears that on Sunday night last, a sacrilegious wretch managed to obtain access to the gas-meter and let off all the water; the consequence was that the gas soon went out, leaving the church in total darkness. Then it was that the same wretch, together with his accomplices, scattered many pounds of finely powdered pepper on the floor, benches, railings and elsewhere! The house was densely crowded, and after the gas was lighted again and while the preacher was in the midst of a stirring appeal to the consciences of the hearers, the ladies commenced to ply their fans, and the persons standing in the asile to move about to get a little fresh air. This roused up the powdered pepper, and started the whole congregation to coughing and sneezing at a rate so terrible as to put a speedy stop to the services. Unable to endure their sufferings, many of the congregation rose up and made for the doors. The doors could not be opened! There were wretches outside holding them with ropes! How long this state of things lasted we were not told; what the consequences must have been, we leave to be imagined.

Attempted Murder and Robery

A Mr. Holden, a very worthy citizen of this place, was waylaid near Chapin's Furnace about 11 o'clock last night, and shot through the abdomen, and robbed of 500 dollars. Mr. Holden at the present writing (Wednesday 8 o'clock A. M.) is yet alive and as we learn, gives the following account. He had been to Detroit, and received the money on board the ferry boat, soon after left on the late train, for his home in this city, and when within a short distance of his residence, he was met by two men who demanded his money; he refused to give it up, when they seized him and succeeded in rifling his pockets. Mr. Holden made an outcry, when one of the ruffians said to the other, "shoot him" and immediately the desperado did, and as we have said, the ball entered the internal viscera; but to what extent has not yet been ascertained. The ball did not pass through the body. We are just informed by Er. Wells, that Mr. Holden has been in great pain during the night, but reaction is now taking place and he is quietly resting. The Dr. also informs us, that there are but feeble hopes of his recovery.

There are various conjectures in regard to the murderers. The general opinion is that the ruffians came with Mr. Holden from Detroit, and got off the cars before he did, and immediately repaired to that point on the street of Mr. Holden's residence, the most favorable for the accomplishment of their murderous designs, and there awaited his approach. Others think that they might have been here some days, and in some way had learned that Mr. H. was away from home for the purpose of collecting money, and was expected to return last night. This opinion receives strength from the following facts. D. Godfrey, who lives nearly opposte the residence of Mr. Holden, was met by two men at the place of the robbery, about 9 o'clock of the same evening. The men stepped before him, but a team was passing at the time, and in all probability the ruffian finding him not to be the man upon whom they had designs, they stepped off the walk, and Mr. G. passed on to his house. There can be no doubt that whoever they were, they were aware of the fact that Mr. H. was in possession of money.

The utmost vigilence is being used to secure the robbers, but as yet without effect.—Journal Aug. 19.

LATER.

Mr. Holden died at 5 o'clock, A. M. yesterday. The funeral services will take place to-day at 2 P. M., at his late residence, formerly the residence of Turner Allen.

The Sheriff has offered a reward of $500 for the arrest and conviction of the men who perpetrated the robbery and murder. The following is a copy of his notice:

FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS REWARD.—Will be given for the arrest and conviction of the men who committed the robbery and attempted murder on the person of S. M. Holden, in this city, on the night of the 18th inst. The amount of money taken was $500 on the Michigan Insurance and Peninsular Banks.

The supposed robbers are described as follows: One is about 5 feet 10 inches high, has a Scotch plad cap, green and black, with a front piece which is green on the under side, and marked quite blindly, "sma," (private mark of Gregory & Town, Dexter,) and to sell at 9s, marked in pencil. Supposed to be a Canadian, and about 22 years old. The other is about 5 feet 6 inches; is an Irishman; perhaps a little older than the other; same kind of cap, but some worn. They had other articles of clothing bought at the same place.

J. C. MEAD,
Sheriff of Washtenaw county, Mich.

Ann Arbor, Aug. 19, 1857.

A post mortem examination of the body of the deceased shows that the ball entered in front about 7 inches to the right of the centre line, and passed upward and backward through both lobes of the liver, the diaphragm, and the lungs, between the seventh and eighth ribs, finding a lodgement under the right shoulder.

We learn that the life of the deceased was insured in the sum of $30,000.

THE TELEGRAPH.—It was expected that the cable fleet would reach the American shore to-day or to-morrow, in case no accident occurred to interfere with its important operations. Those who read the foreign news by telegraph will have noted that the expedition was progressing successfully, and frequently sent messages to the shore through the wires which they were laying. They have laid out some four hundred miles of the cable and were then laying it where the water was two miles deep. We shall hear from the expedition by telegraph as soon as it lands.

☞ It has been thought that mankind is degenerating, because people do not live as long as they did in the days of Methuselah, but the truth is, provisions are so very high that no one can afford to live very long at the current rates.

The Democratic wing of the State Convention have just passed a resolution in favor of appointing a commitee to confer with the Republicans, with the view of making some arrangement by which only one constitution shall be submitted to the people. It is not probable that the members will meet in one convention; but the step is regarded as removing a great obstacle to the immediate settlement of the pending difficulties.

The reported collision between the Sioux and Chippewas is without foundation.

CHICAGO, Aug. 21.

J. P. Brayman, the editor of the Chicago Democrat, (Mayor Wentworth's paper,) was arrested this morning on a charge of robbing the Post Office drawer of money letters, which were found in his possesion. He waived an examination and gave bail for his appearance in the sum of $ 00.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 21.

The Republican publishes a letter from Fort Kearney, dated the 7th, which says that the 5th and 10th Infantry, comprising Phelps' Battery had arrived there.—Capt. Van Vleit had gone forward in advance, on important business. The troops comprising the 5th and 10th, were greatly dissatisfied, and desertions from the latter had amounted to nearly 500.

WASHINGTON. Aug 21.

The Interior Department has received intelligence from a reliable gentleman and fugitive Mormon, that Brigham Young is preparing to resist Gen. Harney, and that he has relapsed into the grossest infidelity, and that he continues to hold up the Government of United States the supreme contempt of the Mormons.

Among the dispatches received by the government is the correspondence between one of our naval officers and the government of Signapore, relative to his ordering our flag to be hauled down by a British officer from the Dutch bark Henrietta Maria, which had been abandoned by the officers and most of her crew, and been taken possession of by the master of an American ship.

Governer Glundell earnestly disclaims any want of respect to the American flag, and the rights of American citizens in the step he felt it to be his duty to take; but the matter does not end here. The Burk was delivered to the Netherlands in India on the grounds that the vessel being Dutch the Chinese Coolies found on board of her if innocent of mutiny, had a claim on the owners; if guilty they were punishable only by the Dutch criminal courts.

The sale of the Delaware Kansas trust lands yeilded over $587,000.

The States learns, on the best authority, that about two years since, an American merchant, named Robinet, residing at Formosa, had a vessel seized by the Chinese authorities, and the same act was subsequently repeated, although he had permision from the Chinese authorities, to keep the American flag flying over the establisment. This being reported to Commodore Armstrong he dispatched Capt. Simms, with directions that he should remain there, and keep the American flag flying until further orders. This occurrence was not thought by the Navy department to be a matter of consequence nor can it be construed as an adoption by by this Government of a system of reprisals, or a departure from the neutrality we have endeavored to maintain in the China seas.

The Secrerary of the Navy has determined to shorten the Cruises of national vessels from 3to2 years. It is expected by this means more efficient seamen will be induced to enter the naval service.

QUEBEC, Aug. 23.

The steamship Anglo Saxon, from Liverpool, at 2 P. M. on the 12th inst., arrived this (Sunday) morning.

She reports much thick weather and constant head winds. Saw nothing of the telegraph expedition.

Owing to an accident on shore connected, with the landing of the cable, the Telegraph expedition did not finally set sail from Valencia Islands, until the evening of Friday the 7th. The latest report from Valanchia, is dated August 10th, 2 o'clock P. M., as follows:

The work of laying down the Atlantic Cable, is going on as satisfactorily as the best friends of the enterprise could desire. Up to the present time about 300 miles of the cable have been laid. The depth water was effected without difficulty. The signals from on board the Steamer Niagara are everything that an electrician could desire.

The steamers are heading west with a moderate breeze and the cable is being run out from the Niagara at the rate of 5 miles per hour and messages are being constantly received on shore. The following is the latest flash from on board the Niagara: "All well on board—moderate westerly winds—all more trustful of complete succers."

The Vanderbildt from New York of the 1st, arrived out on the 11th inst., after a passage of nine days and thirteen hours.

NEW YORK, Aug 25.

The steamship North Star, from Southampton, arrived last night with London papers of the 12th.

The American horse Prioress competed with four others for the Sussex Co. Cup on the 11th and came in fourth.

There is no other news by this arrival.

ST. JHON'S, N. F., Aug. 25.

The line through New Foundland has been repaired, and is now in fine working order. The weather yesterday was very foggy with rain and strong south west wind but is fine and clear this morning with light south-west breezes. There are no signs at Trinity Bay of the Telegraph Cable Fleet.

Late intelligence from Florida is to the effect that Capt. Micklers and the Florida volunteers have captured 5 Seminoles.—The Indians hoisted a white flag. Hopes are entertained that the war is nearly over.

OSWEGO, Aug. 25.

An old gentleman, named Joshua Hibbard formerly a drummer in the U. S. service living on a farm in the vicinity of this city was most brutally murdered, last evening by a man named Dennis Sullivan. The murderer has been arrested. No cause has been assigned for the deed.

New York, Aug. 25.

It is currently reported that Messrs. Delaney, Iselin & Clark, Bankers, and John Thompson Banker and Broker, and publisher of the Counterfeit Detector, have failed.

The liabilities of the Ohio Life Insurance & Trust Co., are estimated at from 5 to $7,000,000 About $700,000 of checks, paid out by the N. Y. Agency on Saturday and Monday, are unpaid.—Messrs. Brown, Brothers & Co. and others have placed an attachment upon the assets of the Company as a foreign corporation and the Sheriff and his deputies are in charge of the property. The immediate embarassment of this Company arose, we understand, from its inability to meet loans made by, it of some banking house in the street. The proceeds of these loans had been used in sustaining Western R. R. Co.'s one of which, is said to have received an advance exceeding half a million. The President states in a card that the capital of the Company, $2,000-000, is sound and reliable, exclusive of such losses as may arise from the insufficiency of securities for loans made by the Company. An attatchment to the amount of over $1,800,000 against the Ohio Life & Trust Company, has been issued to day.

There are large number of others for smaller amounts. The advances to the Cleveland & Pittsburgh Rail Road are mentioned as among the most important made by the Company.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25.

Hon. Richard K. Meade, Minnister to Rio de Janeiro, will leave next month for Brazil. His instructions, which are now being prepared, are very important and relate to the negociation of a new commercial treaty and the reduction of the rates of the high Brazilian Tariff.

Mr. Ranney, of N. C., will be appointed Secretary of Legation to Brazil:

Mr. Meek, of Pa., has declined the appointment of Indian Superintendent in Utah.

The Attorney General has decided that the Commissioner of Patents cannot in any case refund the portion of a caveat fee, a caveat not being an application for a patent, in any possible sense of the of the term.

The remaining portion of the Choctaw Orphan Trust Lands are to be offered for sale to the highest bidder. Sealed proposals will be received by the Land Officers of Missippi until the 1st of November.

The Attorney General has ordered a nolle prosequi in the case of Agent Montgomery, who removed the squatters from the Indian Trust Lands and destroyed their habitations in Kansas.

☞ DeMott has Harper's.

☞ Taylor & Curtis are receiving a fresh supply of goods—see advertisement.

☞ The Juvenile Concert at Bidwell's Hall, was a rare treat. The peices were selected by the children, and well executed. It is a pitty the Juveniles cannot receive the same encouragement as the adults; they proved themselves superior in many pieces. Is it an established fact that there is more talent among these children than the adults, if so, give them the encouragement they deserve, (the light of your countenance) at their Concert, if it does cost you 15cts. If we had more time, we would blow you 'sky high' for neglecting the children and their music.

☞ D. Berdan will be happy to see all those who enjoy dancing, at his house in Macon, September 11th, at 6 o'clock, P. M. It is supposed that this is the good time "coming."

Northern Lenawee Agricultural Fair.—Our readers will not forget the Fair on Thursday the 10 h of September next, which is now close at hand, and so far as present appearances indicate, bids fair to exceed very much the excellent one of the past year. Do not delay purchasing membership tickets until the day is at hand, as other business, connected with the entry of articles for exhibition &c. will then sufficiently occupy the members of the Committee, without adding to it, that which should have been attended to before.

We hope all will look about and see whether they cannot find something worthy of being put upon exhibition, and thus add their mite to the variety and interest of the occasion.

☞ "I say printer, do you take Tecumseh money?"

"No."

"What's the reason—ain't it good?"

"Yes."

"Why, don't you take it, then?"

"Can't get it."

☞ "What is the meaning of Stormbus?" asked a juvenile of his teacher.

"It means, my dear: A genius of marine gastropodus moluska, having the external border or lip dilated into a wing."

"Oh, yes! thank ye, sir."

Your poem must eternal be,
Dear sir, it cannot fail,
For 'tis incomprehensible,
And wants both head tail.

☞ An Irishman attending a quaker meeting, heard a young Friend make the following announcement:

The Pill Trade. Who could dream of the magnitude such an undertaking as the manufacture of a Purgative Pill assums when it comes into general use. And how painfully do the following numbers speak of the amount of human sickness and suffering, that little morcel of a remedy goes forth to combat and subdue. Dr. J. C. Ayer of Lowell, manufactures in his laboratory forty gross per diem of his Cathartic Pills, through all the year. This is eight boxes a minute or one dose a second. We thus find over 43,000 persons swallow this pill every day, or 1,296,000 a month! Physicians, think of that! 43,000 patients a day who seek relief from the medical skill of one man. Surely that man should be, as he is in this case one of the first intelligence and of the highest character. His occupation entails upon him a fearful responsibility for the weal or woe of his fellow man. Evansville Courier.—For Sale by Taylor & Curtis, Tecumseh.

Hall our readers who are troubled with Liver Complaint, Jaundice or Dyspepsia, will read the advertisement in another column of Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, and then do as we have done—get a bottle, we should not see so many sickly, half dead, desparing people as now meet our gaze at almost every corner, for there never was a remedy of which so much is said, and that performs so nearly what its proprietors say it will do. It come to us so highly recommended that we could not fail to try it, and a trial has convinced us without a doubt, that it is the best family medicine in use. We take it for Headache, Sour Stomach, Billiousness, and any of the little bodily ills that are common, and it does produce a pleasant state of feeling to the sick and what is better after using it a few times these little ills grow less and less, and there is a prospect of being entirely free from them by a continuance in the use of the Invigorator. Now we wish to impress our readers with this, that the invigorator is a medicine particularly adapted to family use, and where there are children subject to little diseases, as all children are, it is invaluable, and saves physicians' bills, and an untold amount of anguish both to mothers and their little ones.

Strangles or Horse Distemper—Remedy.

Few diseases attack the horse more perplexing in their effects than Strangles. So little can be done releive the sufferer, and his aliment is so stubborn and unyeilding, allowing neither food nor water to be taken when the disease is at its worst stage, that the animal has at least the appearance of being very ill. Young horses are the most subject to this disease generally in fourth, or fifth year, and usually occuring in the spring it is doubly provoking to the farmer, whose work is put back or hindered.

All horses are subject to this disease and probably none escape. 'There is no preventive,' says Youatt; 'nor is there anything contagious about it. This is certainly contrary to the belief of many farmers, although we are inclined to think that it is not epidemic for horses are frequently taken with it which have not been exposed; and many horses have been ex, o ed without being subject to it. Mr. George H. Dadd, differs from Youatt in his Modern Horse Doctor, end attributes the disease to 'depriving animals of those blessings which nature has in store for them in their unrestrained stat.' And yet after giving his decided opinion that it is the result of deprivation he will not pronounce it not 'catching,' but advises that all animals thus affected, be removed from the presence of healthy ones.

Youatt describes the disease as follows:—'It is usually preceeded by a cough, scarcely distinguished from common cough, except there is more discharged from the nostril, of a yellowish co'or, mixed with pus, and generally without smell. There is likewise a considerable discharge of ropy fluid from the mouth, and greater swelling than usual under the throat. This swelling increases with uncertain rapidity, accompanied by some fever, and a disinclination to eat partly arising from the furr, but more from the pain which the animal feels in the act of mastication. There is considerable thirst, but after a gulp or two the horse ceases to drink, yet is evidently desirous of continuining his draught. In the attempt to swallow and sometimes when not drinking a convulsive cough comes on.'

The treatment for this disease recommended by Youatt is 'to' blister the swelling under the throat, and as soon as it is soft, apparently containing matter, it should be freely and deeply lanced.' The usual practice we believe is to let them burst internally. This he adds 'should never be allowed; but inasmuch as most farmers have neither the necessary implements or skill in surgery, we should be slow to recommend its practice.—The patient should be protected from taking cold, and it may be well not to let him drink of water much chilled by frost. When suffering under this disease, the horse has but very little sense of taste, and in their drink a 'little cream of tartar' and powdered cayenne pepper may be given with good effect. Dr Gardner, who has had much experience in this disease, says that he always treats them successfully as follows. If the horse is not past eating, give powdered cayenne pepper in its a s, and when further advanced let inhale the pepper after the manner of 'taki g snuff.' Also put tar and the pepper mixed, into the nostrils. The Pennsylvania Dutch farmers, who are somewhat celebrated as veterenians, feed the animal mustard seed with its mess, or cause them to snuff it when powdered as above.—One effect produced by these remedies is to clear the throat by sneezing and coughing, so that the breathing is far less difficult and painful.

It is the opinion of Dr. G, above named, that this disease is contagious but if properly treated it need not be dreaded nor avoided, He thinks death will follow in very few instances when the animal is properly treated. After recovery the animal should be as little exposed to taking cold as possible for considerable time; at least so long as the cough hangs about it. J. SANFIELD.

Artichoke as a Field Crop.

Having seen no reply to a question in the Sept. number, asking the opinion of some one who has cultivated the artichoke as a field crop, I came to the conclusion to give you my experience. In the spring of 1850, I obtained one tuber about the size of my thumb and planted it on the north side of a board fence, and paid no more attention to it until March, 1851 when I dug up the ground and got a peck measure level full. These I planted in four rows, ninety feet long and three feet apart. In October I dug the product of these, and had 63 measured bushels. The cows were turned into the field a few days previous to the time I commenced digging; they had such a liking for them that they commenced rooting them out before I had thought of digging them. This caused me to feed my whole crop (save a few seed) out to my milch cows. I am of the opinion that my cows did better, and gave sweeter milk, and made more butter fed upon the artichoke, than they did when fed on mangel wurtzel or sugar beets, both of which I have tried for several years.

In 1852 I planted one and one fourth acres on very poor land—so poor that the adjoining ground, of exactly the same quality, did not produce, with good cultivation over ten bushels per acre. These were planted in drill and plowed twice. In October I dug six rows of the 27 and got 262 bushels. It being very wet and muddy, I then quit digging and turned in 14 head of shoats, about the 20th of November they throve finely on the artichokes and some scattering acorns, until the grass came in spring. I plowed the ground in April, and sowed it to oats but did not turn off the hogs until the oats began to show themselves through the ground' and at harvest, I did not see more than 8 or 10 stalks of artichokes on the whole piece.

I am of the opinon that a thousand bushels of them can be raised off an acre of ground that would produce 50 bushels of corn. And I am also of the opinion that I reaped double the profits from those fed to the cows above those fed to the hogs. They do best planted in a moist soil; gravelly or sandy soil does not suit them so well as moist clayey lands. The farms near where my experiments were made are considered very poor lands for raising, potatoes, 150 bushels being considered a very good yeild. The timber is principally white oak and dog wood underbrush.

Some, perhaps, may wish to know why I do not continue to grow the artichoke, when I think so highly of it. To such please to say that I have quit stock farming, and have no means of experimenting further with it.—Indiana Farmer.

EGYTIAN, OR MUMMY CORN.—Perhaps the most wonderful and interesting specimen of the earth in the Horticultural Exhibition recently closed was some Egyptian corn, raised in the garden of Gen. Wm. H. Sumner, of Jamaca Plains, and kindly sent by him for exhibition, thus giving thousands an opportunity of seeing one of the greatest curiosities within our knowledge. The seed from which this corn was raised, was taken from the folds of cloth around a mummy three thousand years ago, and wonderful as it may seem; after being entombed for so many centuries, like a resurrection from the dead, it springs up in new life and vigor. It is undoubtedly the kind of grain for which Joseph's brethern went to the land of Egypt the "corn" of which the Bible speaks. It is luxuriant in its growth, and the heads resemble wheat but are much larger, forming an inverted conical cluster as large as the closed hand; & the stock and leaves are similar to our Indian corn. There seems to be no reason why it may not become a very valuable additon to our cereal productions, and thanks are due to the gentlemen who are multiplying it and bringing it into notice.—N. Y. Evening Post.

CLEANSE THE BLOOD AND CURE THE SICK

Invalids, Fathers, Mothers, Physicians, Philanthropists, read their Effects, and Judge for Yourselves.

FOR THE CURE OF

Headache, Sick Headache, Foul Stomach,

Torpidity, Inactive Bowels,

Dr. J. C. AYER. Sir: I have been supplying myself with your Pills for the most intractable sort of Dyspepsia, which arises from a foul stomach, which they soon relieve. It seems to me they will cure others as they do me, if they will but have a trial. Yours, with great respect, ED. W. FREELY.

Billious Disorders and Liver Complaints,

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, WASHINGTON, D. C., 7 Feb., 1856.

Sir: I have used your Pills in my general and hospital practice ever since I am made them, and cannot hesitate to say they are the best cathartic we employ. Their regulating action on the liver is quick and decided, concentrating in a remarkable degree the curative effects of that class of remedies. Indeed, I have seldom found a case of bilious disorder of the digestive organs, in which they will not relieve or cure, if they are taken in season. Fraternally yours,

ALFRED L. HALL, M. D., Physician of the Marine Hospital.

Dysentery, Relax, and Worms.

POST OFFICE, HARTLAND, LIV. CO., MICH., Nov. 16, 1855.

DR. AYER: Your Pills are the perfection of medicine. They have done me more good than I can tell you. She had been sick and pining away for months. Went to bed, and could not get out, but got no better. She sent off to be doctored at great expense, but got no better. She then commenced taking your Pills, which soon cured her, by expelling large quantities of worms (dead) from her body. They afterwards cured her and our two children of bloody dysentery. One of our neighbors had it bad, and my wife cured him with two doses of your Pills, while others around us paid from five to twenty dollars doctors' bills, and lost much time, without being cured entirely even then. Such a medicine as yours, which is actually good and honest, will be prized here.

GEO. J. GRIFFIN, Postmaster.

Indigestion and Impurity of the Blood

From Rev. J. V. Himes, Pastor of Advent Church, Boston.

DR. AYER: I have used your Pills with extraordinary success in my family and among those I am called to visit in distress. To regulate the organs of digestion and purify the blood they are the very best remedy I have ever known, and I can confidently recommend them to my friends. Yours,

J. V. HIMES.

From a Forwarding Merchant of St. Louis, Feb 4, 1856.

DR. AYER: Your Pills are the panacea of all that is great in medicine. They have cured my little daughter of ulcerous sores upon her hands and feet that had proved incurable for years. Her mother has been long grievously afflicted with blotches and pimples on her skin and in her hair. These, too, you have cured. She also tried your Pills, and they have cured her. ASA MORGRIDGE.

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and Gout.

From the Rev. Dr. Hewitt of the Methodist Epis. Church.

FLORIDA HOUSE, SAVANNAH, Ga., Jan. 6, 1856.

HONORED SIR: I should be unmindful of gratitude for your skill has brought me if I did not report my case to you. A cold settled in my limbs and brought on excruciating neuralgic pains, which, ended in chronic rheumatism and Neuralgia. I had the best of physicians, the disease grew worse and worse, until, by the advice of your excellent agent in Baltimore, Dr. Mackenzie, I tried your Pills. Their effects were slow, but sure. By persevering in the use of them I am now entirely well.

SENATE CHAMBER, BATON ROUGE, La., 5 Dec., 1855.

DR. AYER: I have been entirely cured by your Pills of Rheumatic Gout—a painful disease that had afflicted me for years. VINCENT SLIDELL.

For, Dropsy, Plethora, or Kindred Complaints, requiring an active purge, they are an excellent remedy.

For Costiveness or Constipation, and as a Dinner Pill, they are agreeable and effectual.

Fits, Suppression, Paralysis, Inflammation, and even Deafness, and, Partial Blindness, have been cured by the alterative action of these Pills.

Most of the pills in market contain Mercury, which, although a valuable remedy in skilful hands, is dangerous in a public pill, from the dreadful consequences that follow its injudicious use. These pills contain no mercury or mineral substance whatever.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

and for the relief of consumptive patients in advanced stages of the disease.

We need not speak to the public of its virtues. Throughout every town and almost every hamlet of the American States, its wonderful cures of pulmonary complaints have made it already known. Nay, few are the families in any civilized country on this continent without some personal experience of its effects; and fewer yet the communities any where which have not among them some living trophy of its victory over the subtle and dangerous diseases of the throat and lungs. Still it is the most powerful antidote yet known to man for the formidable and dangerous diseases of the pulmonary organs, it is also the pleasantest and safest remedy that can be employed for infants and young persons. Parents should have it in store against the insidious enemy that steals upon them unprepared. We have abundant grounds to believe the Cherry Pectoral has save more lives by the cure of consumption it prevents than those it cures. Keep it by you, and cure your colds while they are curable, nor neglect the night cough that comes on the miserable sufferer that lasted on the whole, eats your life away. All know the dreadful fatality of lung disorders, and as they know too the virtues of the remedy, we need not do more than to assure them it is still made the best it can be. We spare neither pains nor cost, nor toil to produce at the most perfect possible, and these afford those who rely on it the best agent with which our skill can furnish for their cure.

Patent Medicines.

A Medicine that Never Debilitates

DR. SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR, OR LIVER REMEDY.

HAS ALL THE GOOD QUALITIES OF A Purgative medicine, answering the purposes of any Cathartic without the debilitating effects experienced from most purgatives. It acts slowly and gently, but surely, moving the bowels to carry off all the secreted matter, at the same time, stimulating the Liver to a proper performance of its functions.

The Invigorator cures the Sick Headache. Take one or two tea-spoonsful at each attack and it will soon disappear. For an overloaded stomache, or when food rises or sours, take the Invigorator after eating, and it will not prove disagreeable or oppressive. For Heartburn, Palpitation, or difficult breathing take a teaspoonful once or twice daily. For Loss of Appetite, Langu or Listlessness, the medicine is invaluable It will restore the appetite and make the food digest well.—Nightmare take a teaspoonful on retiring, and the demons of dream-land will all be fairies. After eating a heavy dinner, take a dose of Invigorator and it will relieve all oppression or fullness. The Invigorator is a Liver Remedy of unequalled virtue, acting directly on that organ, curing Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Billious Attacks, Dysentery, Piles Worms, and all Female Obstructions, for which it has no equal.

We know there is nothing now before the American public, prepared with such skill by a scientific man, particularly for diseases of the Liver, as Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver Remedy. It has attained a reputation second to no other article in the world, simply because it rests on its own merit. To convince all by trial that it is all its proprietors claim it to be, if any of our readers are suffering from such diseases as are described in Dr Sanford's advertisement, we know of no remedy that will so surely cure as the Invigorator.

There has lately been brought to our notice a medicine that seems to possess wonderful, curative and healing proprieties in diseases of the Liver, stomache and Digestive Organs. It came to us with so many testimonials in its favor that we have noted its effects in some of the worst cases of continued debility, caused by deranged liver, and in every instance the effect was to relieve or give a permanent cure, Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver remedy is what we refer to. We always have been credulous about cures by patent medicines, but we are convinced that this medicine, for family use, is not over rated by the host of recommendations it has. Our advice is, for all troubled with Indigestion, Debility or Bowel Complaint, to get a bottle and try it; our word for it, relief will be experienced.

BLESSINGS To The Invalids who use Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, for it will relieve them of their pains as soon as it is taken into the stomach. Pain and misery cannot exist where the Invigorator is used, for it will as surely drive them away, as daylight will banish darkness, of this there can be no doubt to those who try it, for it carries conviction with every dose taken. Another evidence is the thousands of certificates from those who use it or have been cured by it.—Try one bottle, if it does not benefit, then we are mistaken

A Rare Chance for Agents

Bickley's New Romance!

The undersigned has just published No. 1 of a new and intensely interesting Romance, from the pen of C. P. Bickley, Esq., Author of the "Mysteries of the Queen City;" "Garnelle," "The Rival Knights," etc. entitled,

LIFE'S WEBB.

This work is destined to create a greater sensation than any work of fiction ever published in America. In skillful development of plot and vividness of description, it is fully equal to the greatest efforts of G. W. M. Reynolds or Alexander Dumas

The scene is laid in the great American Metropolis—New York; and the Characters introduced are drawn from real life.

They will be published in Monthly numbers (of 32 pages each) and when completed will form a volume of 192 pages.

TERMS—Single subscribers, One Dollar. Clubs of Five, three Dollars, or 60 cents each. Clubs of Ten, five Dollars, or fifty cents each. Remittances may be made by mail at our risk

Active and enterprising agents can realize a handsome commission by canvassing for subscribers.

Be particulor to write the name of Post Office, County and State plainly. This will save trouble and mistakes. Address all orders to

I am now opening a Large, and General Assortment of

Dry Goods and Groceries,

and shall be receiving from week to week, through the Season, any Goods that may be wanted, from the Eastern Manufacturers, and Jobbers of

New York, Boston,

and Other Cities in the East.

I have tried during Nineteen Years of my life the various modes of doing business.

Firstly for Cash.

Secondly on Short Credit.

Thirdly, had to take Long Credit, Orders and Accounts.

Lastly, I have been compelled to wait for payment of Goods sold on Six Months time, long enough for a man to visit California, get rich, and return, before payment could be forced or coaxed.

Now I wish to say, to my numerous friends and patrons, that I am thoroughly convinced that the mode of buying goods on time is both injurious to the buyer and seller,

I will hereafter Sell for Read pay, at such prices that will defy all competion in this Town, State, or the United States.

No one should buy a dollars worth of Goods without calling at the

Great Western Cash Store,

and get the prices. Some are so unfortunate as to be compelled to trade at long credit stores—to those I would say, Call and See what you can save by having the Ready or something as good, to use where you please.

Call one and all, I wish to see the light of your countenance, and the cash from your pockets

The Dim Old Woods.

BY C. S. S.

What stillness in the dim old woods,
What silence in their aisles,
What beauty when the shadows there
Are chased by sunny smiles;
A true and fragrant beauty lies
Entangled in the moss,
As all their golden gushings forth
The little blossoms toss.

The ferns bound up in dewey sheaves,
With golden—tinted leaves,
The tink'ling lily-bell that 'round
My soul a joyance weaves;
The banks of tinny berries, that
So lovingly look up
And now and then a violet,
With blue and silver cup.

Oh! I do love those many flowers
With a regretful love—
They tell of one who long ago
Went to the home above;
And mem'ry like a sweet perfume,
Is stealing from the flowers,
And wand'ring from their beauty here,
Up to eternal bowers.

Hymn.

J. G. WHITTIER.

Where'er our duty's task is wrought
In unison with God's great thought,
The near and future blend in one,
And whatsoe'er is willed is done!

And ours the grateful service whence
Comes, day by day, the recompense;
The hope, the trust, the purpose stayed,
The fountain and the noonday shade.

And were this life the utmost span,
The only end and aim of man,
Better the toil of fields like these
Than waking dream and slothful ease.

But life, though falling like our grain,
Like that revives and springs again;
And, early called, how blest are they
Who wait in heaven their harvest day!

"The old, Old Story."

Summer moonbeams, softly playing,
Light the woods of Castle Keep;
And there I see a maiden straying,
Where the darkest shadows creep.
She is listening—meekly, purely—
To the wooer at her side;
'Tis the "old, old story," surely—
Running on like time and tide.
Maiden fair, oh! have a care;
Vows are many—truth is rare.

He is courtly, she is simple;
Lordly doublet speaks his lot;
She is wearing bonnet and wimple—
His the castle, hers the cot.
Sweeter far she deems his whisper
Than the night bird's richest thrill;
She is smiling—he beguiling—
'Tis the old, old story still.
Maiden fair, oh! have a care;
Vows are many truth is rare.

The autumn sun is quickly going
Behind the woods of Castle Keep;
The air is chill—the night wind blowing,
And there I see a maiden weep.
Her cheeks are white—her brow is aching—
The "old, old story," sad and brief,
Of heart betrayed, and left nigh breaking,
In mute despair and lonely grief.
Maiden fair, oh! have a care;
Vows are many—truth is rare.

An Unusual Wedding Scene.

Some time since, six young gentleman bid farewell to the lasses who had won their hearts amid Scotias blooming heather and sought the shores of America, in hope of being enabled the better to prepare for wedded life. They located at Chicago, where the remembrance of their "bonnie Annie Lauries" inspired them to unusual and persevering exertions, till fortune at last so favored them that they sent home to Scotland the information that they were now anxious to see their betrothed, and accompanied the message with a goodly remittance to pay their passage.—The girls for mutual protection and society, came over the ocean in the same vessel, and arrived in safety at Quebec Thence they embarked with several hundred other emigrants on a river steamer, to continue their journey up the St Lawrence. That steamer was the ill-fated Montreal, and of the six betrothed maidens five found either fiery or watery graves. The sixth, Miss Jeannette Pettigrew, was taken up for drowned, and only by faithful and persistent attention was her life saved. All her worldly possessions were gone, but kind-hearted women at Montreal supplied her abundantly when they heard her affecting story. Eventually she reached her destination and in a late number of the Chicago Tribune there is chronicled the marriage of Mr. Adam Tate, of Chicago, to Miss Jeannette Pettigrew.—He alone reaped the reward of his long exertions; and at the wedding there were present two of the other five young men, whose feelings when they contrasted the happiness of their friend with their own bereaved condition must have been sad indeed.—Boston Traveler.

A justice of the Peace, in Detroit, sent a man to jail for fifteen days for spitting in a woman's face. This is paying well for a spit box.

Annie Gray.

She was a winsome girl; never was one more so. Her home was in the opening of a gorge of the mountain where the ravine spreads into a valley, not very wide, watered by a stream that dashed wildly over the rocks a little farther up. The broad, low cottage of the Widow Gray (as I will call her, by your leave, although I need not say I use a fictitious name) was concealed from view in the day-time by a dense mass of trees and shrubbery, except on one side where the lawn sloped down to the bank of the creek. Here was usually moored two or three little skiffs, which might easily be forced up the rapids, quite into the mountain gorge, and which were often seen bearing Annie and her brother down the current, returning from some expedition on the hills.

Had you passed along the road which crossed the mouth of the ravine below the cottage, you would not have suspected that a house was in the thicket above you, unless it had been in the evening, and you saw the gleam of the light, and paused, to let your horse drink at the edge of the broad creek; and then, perhaps, you might have heard a song floating out of the dark wood; and if you rode on till midnight, it would linger in your ears, and you would fancy you heard a spirit.

That man must have a hard heart that did not love Annie Grey. She was the impersonation of loveliness. I never could describe a face or form. I do not remember friends by their features and I have not the remotest idea of the color of their eyes or hair, in nine cases out of ten. But I do remember her with distinct memory. She was tall; that is, rather above the medium height, and slender but gracefully and beautifully shaped. Every motion was natural and unaffected, and her footstep was a light as her heart—and that had not a heaviness. Sweet Annie Gray! The music of her laughter rings from out the lonesome years like the melodious carol of a bird in the arches of a ruined temple! Her eye was dark, quick as sunshine in its changes, and full of unspoken poetry. You might read all manner of beautiful fancies and holy thoughts there. But I linger too long on this description of her. Her brother was a fine fellow, a year or two older than she, and one of the merriest boys in all the country. He loved his sister, too, as I have before remarked; love has a reflecting force which marks the lovely.

I am completely lost in a whirlwind of memories, now that I return to those days and scenes. There were a thousand incidents of my early life that are brought vividly before me the moment I recall the old cottage in the glen and its beloved inmates. How startling does the trite remark, that we live in a changing world, recur to our thoughts every day. In fact, it cannot become trite.

The very stars that we worship as changeless sometimes fall, and the eyes that we worship with more devotion than the stars, grow dim, and the hearts that we fancy are immutable change mournfully! There is nothing immutable but God. It is the attribute of Deity which includes all others, and to which mortals do homage because they cannot comprehend it.

A score of years has removed the cottage from the earth, and its inhabitans have separated here—have met again up yonder! One by one, their lips murmering hymns and prayers, and their white hands folded together, the friends of my younger days have passed away, and but few remain of all that company.

Annie Gray died thus: One glorious summer evening, when the moon was in its full, she and Ned had been strolling up the mountain side, and coming down together, had nearly reached their boat as twilight gathered around them. Loth to return from the forest, she bade Ned push the little skiff almost under the fall; and standing on a rock in the very middle of the water, she shook her tiny fist at the cataract, and held a mock conversation with it.

Returning from the days shooting on the mountains, I saw her on the pedestal before I was seen, and throwing myself down upon the ground, watched her with admiring eyes. Undine herself was not more beautiful. She talked to the water as to an old familiar friend; and in truth, if there be sprites and ouphes, they must have loved her. Her voice was clearer than that of the steam, and when she laughed, as she at length did, at some odd reply she imagined the fall to make, the old arches of the forest and the ravine gave back a musical echo, so that I started to my feet and listened to it as to the voice of fairies.

But a cry of half terror and half laughter startled me, and, springing down the bank, I saw her a single instant as she disappeared in the water. Her footing had proved insecure, and she slipped from the rock into the embrace of the stream she loved.

It was the work of only an instant for her to spring out and swim by a few strokes to the shore, and she was not a particle frightened by the occurrence.—On the contrary, the woods rang with her uncontrollable laughter as soon as she was on the shore.

I walked in that same forest two years ago, and heard again the music of that ringing laughter through the long halls of time, made scarcely more melodious by its passage through the corridors of years.

Placing her in the boat, and taking the oars from Ned, I soon delivered them safely at the cottage, and bade them good night. The next day Annie had a raging fever, and was delirous for ten days. I saw her several times but she did not recognize me, albeit I was a near relative, and had known her from her birth. There was one voice that she recognized, and one face that she looked up to with longing love. It was the face of Phil R——, who had won her pure young heart. But I will not intrude on the sacred memory of that love which is the property of but few now living. Phil is dead too. On the tenth day of her sickness she slept heavily, and awoke in her her right mind. But alas! for the dear ones around her, it was but too evident she was near to Heaven. Her eye was clear, and full of joy, as if she had been, as I doubt not she had, with the ange's.

Old Mr. Thompson, the clergyman who baptized us all, and had buried our fathers, and had loved us faithfully from the days of our first lisping, stood by her bed, and she smiled joyfully as she saw him.

"Ah, Mr. Thompson, I used to wonder whether I should die with you all around me, and that is just exactly as I wished it. It seems strange, too, that I am dying I don't exactly believe it. Phil, am I dying?"

"God forbid, Annie,"

"Ah! that tone, Phil! You mean to say God alone can save me, for all hope of man is gone. Don't grieve, though—don't grieve! Why, it isn't hard to die. I love the dear earth well enough to stay here—and the flowers and birds, and the brooks, and the old seat down by the bank of the stream; but I don't feel so very sorrowful to leave them as I used to think I would. And I do love mother and Ned, and Mr. Thompson, and—and—and you, Phil!" and here her voice, which had been low, but cheerful, suddenly tremblad, and she was silent.

At lenth she continued in a renewed tone of cheerfulness:—"Phil, go sometimes and sit on the old seat down there by the stream, and put your arm along the back of it, and look up; and if you don't feel my kiss, it will be because angel's kisses can't be felt, for if God will let me, I'll come there and take the seat which I have so often sat in, and lay my head on your shoulder. Mr. Thompson, I'm going to leave at last in advance of you. I started a long way behind, but I shall be there first after all."

The good old man, to whom this part of the sentence was addressed, sobbed aloud; but at length recovering composure, he knelt at the side of her bed, and his long white locks fell over the counterpane as he commenced the prayer of earnestness. I stood still at the foot of the bed, and watched the face of our angel girl

As he spoke of Heaven her eye lighted, and as he begged God to spare her to us a little while, I saw her hand steal along until it reached Phils head, and her tiny fingers were among his thick locks of hair, and the next moment her hand was in his, and he rose, and, sitting by her side, gazed into her face with unutterable love; and as the sublime words of hope escape from the lips of the clergyman, I saw her move, as if to say "Kiss me, Phil;" and he stooped down to her and with her arms around his neck, and that last loving kiss upon her lips, she went forth by the unknown path that all must tread.

Strong in her simple faith, and leaning confidently on her Saviour, she, who was fairest of our children here, has long ago become, I cannot doubt, one of the fairest of God's children there.

Peace be with her. On her grave, violets bloom; and I have seen children, who have wandered over the hills in search of flowers all the day long in vain, refuse to pluck those which bloomed holily over all that was earthly of Annie Gray Peace be with her? In that sunny land, whereof I dream in summer Sabbath morning dreams, I trust one day to meet her. There the voice that was low and plaintive as the night wind here has renewed its tones in thrilling melody. There the last sound of sorrowful discord is hushed; for, as she left us, those sounds died away, faintly, scarce heard, then gone forever! and she did not hear them when she came back, as she did at times, to keep the tyrant with Phil. She heard, then, no sounds but the beating of his heart.

One summer morning, ten years afterwards, she called him suddenly, and his spirit sprang forth at the call. The bonds of earth were broken. None knew where of he died.

A Good Joke.—Wm. Wells Brown, the colored orator, who is not so black as some white men, told a very good story at the Abington celebration on Saturday. On a steamboat on Cayuga Lake, the other day he went to the breakfast table with the other passengers. Just as he took his seat, a dark colored white man called a waiter and asked if colored persons were admitted to the the table with white folks. The waiter did not know exactly what to say, so he called the Captain, who on entering the cabin enquired who had called for him; "I sir," said Mr. Brown, pointing to the dark stranger "I desire to know if it is your custom to allow colored people at the regular table?" The Captain replied that no objection had ever been made before, and seeing the dark white man evidently annoyed in spirit, appealed to the generosity of the colored orator, to allow him to remain.—Mr. Brown finally consented, and at this turn of affairs the white man, who was so black as to be passed for a negro,, left the table in utter disgust and unable to speak his thoughts.—Boston Traveler.

Breach of Promise.—A lady asks us whether an action for breach of promise of marriage can be sustained against the writer of the following verse:

'Angel! beneath whose folded wing
My soul would rest,
Be mine, for lo! I've bought the ring,
And all the rest
Of those house treasures and etceterns,
Which every one who tries his state to better has!'

We are not sufficiently learned in law to answer the question as to breach of promise of marriage; but it is certainly a most glaring case of breach of promise of poetry.'

A Solemn Joke.—'Bill, I've been in real estate little, lately.'

"Well, John how much have you dipped in?"

'Bought a lot in the Cemetery, and a half acre for a residence lot just north of it.'

'Just north of it.'

"Just north! what in the deuce did you go so far north for? Going to live there?"

'Yes, Bill, I wanted a home beyond the grave.

Monticello.—A correspondent of the Alexandria Sentinel, writing from Charlottesville, June 29th, says:

"About those miles from this place situated on a peak of the South West Mountain, is Monticello, once the residence of Jefferson. He at great expense leveled its rugged summit and built a unique edifice—entirely after his own notion and there he lived and died. A rough granite monument much defaced by visitors, marks his lost resting place. The estate belongs to a wealthy foreigner, who bought it at a great sacrifice some years ago, and has cared but little for it since for the house is in a very dilapidated condition and the grounds bear very little resemblance to their beauty in Jeffersons time. It is a burning shame, and saddens the heart to visit the place. It would have been cared for long ago, but that the present proprietor will not sell except at an exhorbitant price. It commands a prospect beautiful beyond description. From it can be seen Charlottesvile also the University, the noblest and most permanent monument that Jefferson could have erected to his memory beyond these stretches away in graceful outlines as far as vision can reach, the blue mountains and on every hand, hill and dale meandering streams make up the landscapes. Many persons from lower Virginia and the South, spend their summers in this county in preference to going to the Springs. Here they have salubrious air, beautiful scenery, good water, and the very best society."

Tricking a Panther.

Old Ben Wheaton, who lived in Brier Valley, about two miles from the Susquehanna river, was an inverate lover of Forest sports. He, like most of the early settlers of Otsego, had selected a farm from the hill lands, leaving the broad swamp lands for hunting grounds. His shanty was erected on a stream in Brier Valley, which is now called afte his name Wheaton Creek. The most of his time was expended in journeys through the forest, in company of a fair famed Mohawk Indian named Aton, but sometimes, Ben loved to pursue his sports without a companion And well he might, for he did not need a guide. Every nook, dell, crevice and cave, from the Otsego lake to the mouth of the Delaware river, was familiar to Ben Wheaton, and he had often pursued his game to almost every part of that country. He cheifly hunted the wolf, as well for profit as for sport for the government paid a silver dollar in the shape of a bounty on every skin. Bent on increasing his store of coin, old Ben one fine summer morning, shouldering his rifle, and taking his knapsack containing a sufficient supply of corn cake and dried venison, he crossed the Susquehanna, and took his way toward Franklin Mountain, which lies between the village of Otsego and Franklin. The day was sultry, and by the time he had accomplished one half the ascent of the mountain, he concluded that he needed rest. He therefore took a seat upon a moss covered log, near a spring, and ate his luncheon. The still solitude, the balmy air, together with the singing of the birds, and the lazy hum of the bee, finally lulled the hunter to repose. He must have slept long; for when he awoke the sun was declining far westward and a few ripples of golden light lingered on the tree tops which he noted after clearing a mass of dry leaves from his face which he thought had blown there but in attempting to rise, however, he discovered himself completely buried in them.

Now it is a notorious fact that the panther will cover a sleeping or dead body, and leave it for a time but only eventually to return and devour it. The instant Ben awoke, therefore, the truth flashed upon his mind, that a panther had found and concealed him, and the animal might at that moment be watching him ready to make the fearful spring. He arose quickly seized his rifle that rested against a tree, and hastily throwing together some large peices of decayed timber, and covering them with leaves, he climbed a tree and waited patiently the panthers coming. He had not to wait long. Presently he saw it—a she one—stealing along with a cat like tread, she hid in some brushwood. Dropping herself on the ground, she crept slowly towards her expected prey, lashing the earth with her tail, and her eyes glowing like coals of fire. The appearance of things, however, did not seem to satisfy her, but she sprang up elevated her back, and threw herself upon her supposed victim with a wild yell. The wood and leaves flew about in all directions, for a moment the panther seemed filled with rage.—Suddenly she sprang aside, drooped her tail, and peered around among the brushwood; then raising her eyes upward, she encountered the hunter's gaze fixed upon her. With another screech more terrible than the first, she prepared to spring, when with an aim that seldom failed, old Ben fired, and she fell, tearing the earth with her claws.—The shot was fatal.

Our adventurous hunter re-loaded the empty barrels, and waited for her companions to come up; but none arrived, so he killed the cubs and built a fire. This was a necessary proceeding, for the sun had set, and the flickering shadows of night were creeping into the landscape. With true backwoods audacity, he relied on his fire for protection from quadruped prowlers, and stretching himself with his feet to the burning wood, on the leaves that before covered him, he once more resigned himself to the embrace of Morpheus. He often afterwards characterized the escape as the narrowest one he had ever experienced.

☞ Herodotus relates that Histaus, the Milesian, being detained a prisoner by Darius, and all correspondence interdicted, he shaved a man's head, wrote a despatch upon it, and kept the man out of sight till his hair was grown. The living letter was then sent, and the person to whom it was addressed, upon having the messenger's head, found the news there inscribed.

Moonlight Musings.

'Tis the solemn midnight hour—hour of Madness and of gloom
And the taper dimly flickering, peoples with wierd shapes my room,
Sitting here, alone and weary, while the storm-god howls aloof,
List I to the dismal pattering of the rain upon the roof.

Listening to its ceaseless dropping mingled with the wailing blast,
Other days come up before me from the half-forgotten past—
Other loved ones cluster round me, as in those glad, golden years,
Ere my heart had known of sorrow or my eyes grown dim with tears.

Then I wandered in the woodland, a free and happy child,
And my step was gay and blithsome and my laugh rung clear and wild,
Then life lay before my vision, a landscape decked with flowers,
Where the birds and bees made music, through the long, long summer hours.

But too soon a darksome shadow floated o'er my pathway fair,
And the music of the zephyr changed to wailings of despair;
For a voice was hushed forever, that had oft my bosom thrilled,
And a heart all warmly beating, in Death's cold embrace was stilled.

Closed are those blue eyes, in slumber that on earth may know no waking,
Folded those pale hands, whose touch once soothed my hot brow's aching
Oh! my guardian angel perished, and my life's best comfort gone,—
Tongue may never tell the anguish of that morning's dawn.

Years since that dark hour have fleeted, and my heart is aching yet,
And the sad tones of that farewell never shall my ear forget—
But I know there is a Heaven, never touched by sorrow's frost,
Where a glorious welcome waits me, from the loved and lost.

Effects of Fine Arts on Primary Schools.

It must not be supposed that those who claim for our common schools an initiation at least into the refinements and mysteries of cultivated taste, would thereby seek to under estimate, or depreciate the importance or advantages of the more substantial studies.

The queston which they would agitate, is not whether these should in any measure be less pursued, or dispensed with, but whether in the pursuit of them with all due diligence and to their fullest extent, there may not also to good advantage be mingled with them the simpler elements of culvated beauty and taste In nature, the elements of a severe utility are not unmingled with scenes of simple grandeur, and objects of pleasing beauty. Such is made on earth the home of man, and the human heart and mind untortured by art, is found adopted, and responsive to the full improvement and enjoyment of its native element.

The pencilled flower falling with its sweet beauty upon the eye teaches no severe lesson of an unyielding utilitarianism; but beams forth rather creations unrebuking smile upon the pleasing though unproductive dreams of a gentle poesy. Not that earth bears only flowers, or life is only dreams of faney with the toils of earth.

Now it may well be questioned whether there is anything in the youthful mind so inconsistent with its future duties and enjoyments as to require its entire withdrawal from amenities and refinements of taste during the first years of its educational discipline. It is true that the mind must be to a certain extent cultivated to enable it to appreciate or enjoy to the fullest extent the highest beauties and pleasures of taste and refinement. But it is not therefore true that even the infant mind is wholly without any appreciation of them.

The veriest child is capable of deriving pleasure from the beauty of a flower, or the melody of song, and while this is so, it is but reasonable that these rational pleasures should be mingled with the severe discipline of intellectual cultivation. To gather flowers, and learn their names and simple classification is no very difficult task; and the zest, variety and exercise which it may be made to afford a juvenile class, may simply as an amusement be favorably compared with most of more boisterous and less refining relaxations of the play ground. The grouping of the stars, and the names of the prominent constellation are as easily acquired and retained by the boy of ten, as the man of twenty-five years. The voice of music is sweeter to the child, than to the adult, while its gentle spell is far more potent to soothe the turbulence, and calm the waywardness of his impulsive nature.

So also of painting and drawing. The simpler elements of these most beautiful, and among the loftiest of human attainments, are as deeply implanted in the native taste and talent of the child as of the adult. To copy nature is the first unrestrained impulse of opening intellect. How proper then that this impulse should be guided into the appropriate channels of refinement and cultivated taste, yielding all along the toiling way that winds slowly up towards the heights of science and earthly fame, its unfolding sweets, and pleasing relaxations, rather than that studiously discarded and repressed, to be afterwards brought abruptly upon the neglected stage in an unnatural and almost uncongenial order, it should be for the most part wholly overlooked, or so pursued that that which was made and meant for pleasure shall be turned to toil.

It will not lessen the merit of good reading, that those infant theories have also learned betimes to modulate the melody of music, nor will it lessen the accuracy of numbers, that they can count the constellations of the stars. It will not detract from the merits of a clear and graceful chirography, that the same tiny hands can trace the petals of a flower, the simple cottage or castellated palaces of architectural beauty, or the gorgeous outlines of the mountain cliff, nor will it be found upon trial that infant minds even are unfitted for a native perception. and marked progress in those branches of cultivation and taste which have all along been supposed as only adopted to finish, rather than interspersed to embellish and enliven the whole course of educational discipline.

☞ It has been thought that mankind is degenerating, because people do not live as long as they did in the days of Methuselah, but the truth is, provisions are so very high that no one can afford to live very long at the current rates.

The Panic in Wall Street—Railroads.

The 25th inst. was a severe day in Wall street. People were thoroughly astonished to find the most honored, the most wealthy, the strongest houses succumbing to a sudden pressure upon their resources, to which no resistance could be offered. One of our most respectable Bankers, several foreign houses, and several engaged in a large wholesale business went by the board, and millions of dollars have been lost almost in the twinkling of an eye. Numbers of banks have gone down in the crash, and the end is not yet. Who will fall next is a serious and alarming question, which every one asks, and no one can answer.

This state of things has long been foreseen, and prudent navigators have taken in sail. Many more would have done so if they could. The fact is we have been ruined by too much prosperity. Success has been so universal that it has tempted men out of their depth, and they and they have sunk just in sight of land. While a great many causes may be assigned for these dreadful reverses, there is one which seems to have been most direct and immediate, our present railway system We have been making roads where they were not wanted, parallel lines where one was enough, and instead of treating these internal improvements as sound and necessary auxiliaries to the business of the country, they have been made the footballs of speculotion, and brought into Wall street to be the subjects of the most scandalous speculations.

The Managers and Directors, generally speaking, have considered both bonds and stocks not as the representatives of honestly applied funds, but as the roads themselves, and have acted accordingly. It was to them no matter how a road was conducted, how large or how useless were the expenditures, if money could be rased easily, or even dearly in Wall street; and they have thus not only ruined the enterprises, and the confiding stockholders who started them, but are rapidly falling themselves. Unless it be that we may except that particular clique of them, who foreseeing the storm approaching, have taken care to protect themselves. The failures we announced yesterday are among a class of persons who have been drawn in, step by step, to advance money on these securities, by the payment of a large bonus, for temporary accommodation. Day by day they have seen their margins diminishing. Stocks on which they readily advanced to within five per cent of their par value have gone down to mere fractional quotations. Their capital has melted away before there eyes, and when they ponder upon their securities they find them as baseless as the fabric of a vision. Such results must, of course be utterly ruinous, and we see them in their most startling forms. Honorable and esteemed houses lie prostrate before the blast, and we find that capital itself is not able to withstand its fury.

Some radical change in our Rail Road managment is now imperiously demanded. These Companies must be forthwith placed in some other hands, or they will all go down together. Those who have heavy loans to meet, and consequently heavy interest to pay, will find that they can borrow money no longer, the day of reckoning has arrived. We do not know how they are to escape. The first step is to place at their head practicable and responsible Engineers, trained to their business, who can stop the leaks, who know how, when and where to economize in the management, and how to lessen the enormous amount of useless and wasteful expenditure. In the next place there should be competent Committees of Finance, who should have charge of the whole pecuniary interests of the Companies, and in the next it should be cause for removal if any officer speculted in the stock of the Company to which he belonged. We could name some Railwas which had actually gone down to nothing, that under an entire change of the management are rising to a state of solvency.—Besides this, public opinion should enlist itself strongly against the speculative practices at the Stock Board. We believe there is a statute against sales of Stock on time bargains, but it is little regarded in Wall or William streets. Twenty-two millions of dollars worth of Stocks have been quoted as sold there in a single week when seventy five per cent; of the amount was purely fictitious, and parties who made the sales were not worth one cent of them.

The property of innocent stockholders is thus treated as if it did not belong to them, and they are ruined without being able to tell why. Well, we have arrived at a point when futher depreciation appears almost impossible. Those who are flat on their backs have at least one advantage: they can look up.—N. Y. Mirror.

The Patriotic Fund, subscribed in G. Britain and her provinces, and by British residents and others of foreign countries, for the benefit of the soldiers who suffered in the Russian war, their wives and children, is one of the largest of the kind ever collected. It amounts to upwards of $7,000,000.

Post Office Robbery.

On Friday morning officer Dennis arrested Mr. James O. Brayman on the charge of robbing the post office drawer of McNally & Co. of letters containing money and other valuables. For several months Messrs. McNally & Co. have missed letters, most of which, however, were registered ones, and had made repeated complaints to Postmaster Price in regard to the matter. The complaints becoming so frequent, officer Dennis was instructed to keep strict watch, with a view to detect, if possible, the perpetrator of the thefts At first it was supposed that the robberies were committed by some one inside the office, but subsequent disclosures proved such ideas to be ill-founded. A plan was then put into operation, which it was believed, would not fail to lead to the detection of the guilty party or parties. On Wednesday morning last Mr. Brayman, one of the editors of the Democrat, and who had been accustomed to taking that paper's exchanges from the post office, was seen by those on watch to open McNally's drawer, but took nothing out, there being no letters in it. The officer took but little notice of the fact, believing it was done through mistake. On the following morning Mr. B. was again seen to open the drawer, and take out seven letters, one of which was a decoy, and contained ten dollars in bills. Even this failed to convince the dectives that Mr. Brayman was guilty of the crime, which has since been so clearly fixed upon him. These letters not being returned to McNally, the suspicion strengthened in the mind of the officer, and on Friday morning they were again on the watch. On that morning Mr. Brayman came to the post office as usual, and after having taken the Democrat exchanges, he again opened McNally's drawer, taking out three letters, which he put in his pantaloons pocket. While this was being done, Mr. Dennis D. Darden, who was on the lookout inside, signalled to officer Dennis, who had stationed himself in the alley. He looked into the door, and saw Mr. Brayman just shutting Mac's drawer. This being done, he started through the alley towards Clark street, but was arrested before reaching there, and taken back to the post office, where he was searched, and the letters found in his possession. He was very agitated when arrested, and on recovery attempted to give an explanation of his conduct. He was taken before U. S. Commissioner Moulton, but waived an examination, and the Commissioner fixed his bail at $9,000, which was afterwards reduced to $5,000; Messrs. John Wentworth, Luther Haven, John S. Buchanan and L. A. Willard becoming his security.

The above is the statement of the officers who made the arrest, and to which they hold themselves ready to give oath when the trial shall take place.

The position of Mr. Brayman, before this unfortunate discovery, was such that no one who knew him could credit the story, when it was first reported. He was a member of the First Baptist (Dr. Howard's) church, and his previous character was such as to place him almost above suspicion after the proofs began to point towards him. Altogether it is an unhappy affair. His numerous friends and connections, who are very much respected, must keenly feel the disgrace that will attach to one of whom they had thought so much, and, so far as we have observed, the feeling occasioned by the discovery of the act, is one of unfeigned sorrow.

There were one thousand men, women and boys following after, binding and shocking up the golden sheaves. It was a sight worth seeing, to behold the grain falling and being gathered up at the rate of two hundred acres per hour!"

The passenger boats of the Mich. Southern R. R Line, have been attached by a party in New York for a claim of $160,000. The attachment is not yet released consequently there will be no boat for Toledo to-night.

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.

The Collins steamship Atlantic arrived at 6 o'clock Sunday morning, from Liverpool on the 19th inst.

She signalized the Persia on the 24th and saw the Fulton off Cape Race on the 26th.

The Asia arrived out at eight o'clock on the morning of the 16th.

The news by this arrival is unimportant The Directors of the Atlantic Telegraph Company were to hold a special meeting in London, the day the Atlantic sailed, to consider whether the attempt should be renewed in October or deferred until another summer.

The London Star says, that it is estimated that the outside loss the Company will sustain will be about £25,000. It is fully expected that at least one half the sunken cable will be recovered; all that is within 400 fathoms will be got up, but that portion in deep sea will in all probability never be recovered.

The proceedings of Parliment are uninteresting.

The recent storms and floods had done considerable damage to the crops &c., in various parts of England; but dry weather had prevailed during the day preceding the Atlantic's departure, and it was reported that the effect of the rain would be much alleviated.

The London Times says, a merchant recently deceased, at Liverpool, is said to have left liabilities reaching £300,000, of which £100,000 are through forged acceptances to Bills of Exchange. The Liverpool Post pronounces the story a hoax.

The mail steamer for India, would sail on the 19th of August, and would take out £1,250,000 in silver.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says the French Government contemplates sending a Naval and Military Expedition to Cochin China, to support a demand for an insult offered to the French Representative by the Emperor. He also says that it is proposed to form a marjtime and commercial post in the Bay of Touraine, Cochin China.

The fetes of Napoleon on the 15th passed off well, although the outdoor arrangements were marred by wet weather. It is expected that France will demand of England the extradition of Ledru Rollin, and it is stated that he is about to come to the United States.

The Paris correspondent mentions the departure from Paris to Marseilles of Gen Dorgoni, and predicts that he will be found at the head of the insurgents of Delhi before November. It was he who stirred up the last Burmez war.

BUFFALO, Aug. 31.

The Hollister Bank closed its doors this morning.

There has been a heavy run on some other city banks but it has resulted in no damage to them as yet.

The excitement has been intense during the forenoon but has now almost entirely subsided.

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.

To-day is the most exciting one Wall Street has seen yet The Mechanics Banking Association has closed its doors in consequence of the defalcation of one of its officers to the amount of 70,000 dollars. Beebe & Co., Bankers, suspended payment to-day. J. H. Haviss & Co., extensive hat manufacturers failed, and Adams & Buckingham, bankers and dealers in flour have failed. The Erie R. R. Co is paying its interest to day—Money is very stringent. There are heavy runs on several banks.

BUFFALO, Sept. 1.

The run which commenced on the Banks in this city yesterday, has entirely ceased. It was confined principally to holders of small bills and not in the least to the business community. The whole amount of gold drawn from all the banks did not exceed $15,000. The Banks anticipating further drafts upon their specie to day ordered a large amount of gold from the east. It arrived by express during the night, and this morning there is more gold in their vaults than there ever was in this city at any one time before The Savings Bank received during the panic yesterday, $70,000 on deposit.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 1

The St. Louis Agricultural and Mechanical Association commencing on the 28th September promises to be the most resplendent display ever witnessed within the past year. The grounds have been ornamented and large additions made for the accomodation of articles to be exhibited, Nothing has been overlooked to increase the convenience and comfort of visitors. The premium list embraces prizes amounting to $16,000. It is confidently expected that this fair will prove St. Louis to be the agricultural and mechanical exchange of the Missisippi valley.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 1.

Cannon were fired here to day and mass celebrated in honor of Gen. Lopez The weather is pleasant, and our citizens are returning from their summer tours.

Sales of cotton are unimportant. The steamer's news had no effect on the market. Flour is active, and generally unchanged.

WASHINGTON, Sept 1.

Forty thousand bushels of wheat had been received at Wilmington up to the 27th ult.

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.

The Hamburg steamer Borussia sailed to-day for Hamburg with 116 passengers and $23,000 in specie.

There were no signs of the Vanderbilt at 2 P. M.

ELMIRA, Sept. 1.

Over one hundred horses are entered for the fair.

The grand cavalcade of all the horses on exhibition is now progressing and is led by Flora Temple, Dancet and Jack Rossiter.

NEW YORK, Sept. 2.

Mr. Van Blacom the defaulting teller of the Mechanics Banking Association states that the missing money had been paid to parties who have been allowed to overdraw their accounts, and has been passed over to the officers and a large number of notes received in return for such.—The case has consequently assumed the feature of more breach of trust, and Van B. has been discharged from custody.

DIED

Died on the 16th of August, Mr. JAMES L. HILLOCK, aged 23, of Consumption.

Mr. HILLOCK, though so young, had been for a number of years a consistent and devoted member of the Baptist Church in this place, and by his amiable disposition his kind and unassuming deportment, and his manly christian character had endeared him to all who knew him.

During a protracted illness, his patient resignation and submission to the will of his father in heaven, and his joyful anticipation of death—not as a relief from suffering—but as an introduction to the presence of that Savior, whom he lived so fervently and in whom he trusted so implicitly—furnished a beautiful illustration of the power of christian faith to sustain the soul, when all other hopes fade and all other dependencies fail.

☞ Our billingsgate neighbor of the Patriot accuses us of quackery, because we publish Dr. Ayre's advertisement. Does this same editor know the Pharmacopia himself is not more free from the name of quackery than his medicines. Is not the latter they are endorsed by the medical faculty of this country, are uses and prescribed by the best physicians, and have the concurrence of professors and eminent men of character too exalted for his comprehension, and who knows too that they have done and are doing in this community an amount of good to the utmost stretch of his ability can ever hope to equal.—Berks Co. Press Pa.

We wish to say to every person who reads this that there is an article known as Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver Invigorator which can be relied on as certain to cure any or complaint in any of its forms, from a common Jaundice. Dyspepsia and numerous other complaints, described in another column, besides which it is one of the greatest preventatives or cures for consumption, taken in its early stages, that is now known. There is no doubt in the world a better liver remedy or a more perfect debilitated system than Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, for it has been fully tried in the severest and extended practice till its results are fully known, and now it is offered to the public freely, and one that can be relied on.

Local and Miscellaneous.

☞ Prof. A. B. Palmer, of the Michigan University, will deliver the address at the annual Fair, in Tecumseh, September 10th.

☞ The gravel train, was chartered yesterday, by three gent's, two from Toledo, and one from Adrian, who had acquired between them about $300, and concluded to give the Bank of Tecumseh a "sweater," unless LILY done the "fair thing." Friends of bank offered these crazy chaps, eastern funds, real or personal estate, but all to no purpose. The last heard of these gentlemen, they were 'going home' with their gold, sympathising with Banks, Railroads, and our First class Hotel. Our Friends having a supply of Tecumseh money on hand, will please remember, we quote it at par.

☞ Charles Strong offers a large assortment of fruit trees for sale. Those visiting the Fair, will remember his nursery is but a few steps across the road.

Hail Storm N. Y., visited Macon last Friday, spoiling the remains of the three former storms The lighting struck the barn of Collins Davis, and killed a horse cow, and several pigs. The damage is light to both the barn and the crops it contained.

☞ The fall term of the Union School will commence, September 7th.

Levi J. Nortt's Circus, is a very good one, but a miserable lot of gamblers accompany it. Shut 'em up.

☞ We are happy to learn that our citizens appreciate Mr. Brown's capacity for instructing the Juveniles, in the art of singing, by offering him a large class.

☞ Amos Van Ormer, is prepared to supply his customers with an excellent chain pump—see advertisement.

THE RURAL AMERICAN.—We would call the attention of our readers to the advertising department. We have recieved a copy from the publisher, and we are free to say, that it is an excellent and very cheap agricultural and general family paper, and no person who subscribes for it can fail in our opinion, to receive many times the cost of it in sound practical information—just what the masses of our farmers need. Mr Miner is also publisher of that popular monthly, the Northern Farmer, commenced in 1852 which reached a circulation of 15,000 copies the second year of its existence.

☞ The following counsels, given by an old maiden aunt to her neices, on the the subject of choosing a partner for life, are shrewd and thoughtful:

"Neve marry a man until you have seen him eat. Let the candidate for your hand pass through the ordeal of soft boiled eggs If he can eat them and leave the table spread, the napkin and his shirt unspotted take him Try him next on spare-rib. If he accomplishes this without putting out one of his own eyes, or pitching the bones into your lap, name the wedding day at once; he will do to tie to.'

☞ In one respect Mrs Cunningham's last performance was not a failure She is out to be confined, and has succeeded admirably. She is not, however, in a sinking condition, as the courts refuse to allow her to be bailed out

☞ The stock of the Southern Road, which, under the effect of the boat seizures the resignation of Mr. Litchfield and the general depression of the stock market, went down ten cents on a dollar, appears to be recovering. At yesterday mornings board, it sold at 17, and in the afternoon 25 cents.

☞ Why are musquitos like doctors? Because they never flea-botomize you without running up a bill.

Rats and other vermin are kept away from grain by a sprinkling of garlic when packing the sheaves.

Money expended in drying land, by draining or otherwise, will be returned with ample interest.

To cure scratches on a horse, wash their legs with warm soap suds, and then with beef brine. Two applications will cure the worst case.

Timber cut in the spring, and exposed to the weather with the bark on, decays much sooner than if cut in the fall.

Wild onions may be destroyed by cultivating corn, plowing and leaving the corn in the plowed state all winter.

THE TECUMSEH NURSERY.

CHARLES STRONG, Proprietor.

The liberal encouragement heretofore extended to me, has enabled me from time to time to increase my stock of Nursery products, so that now I have not only one of the largest establishments in the State, but one which is excelled by none other in the quality of our plants. These considerations, together with that other other one, moderation in prices, enable us to offer inducements, second to none, to those commencing the business, or buying to sell Again. Every care is taken in the training and culture of my trees, while in the Nursery, to fit them properly for the hand of the Planter, regarding symmetry of proportion, and hardiness of constitution as cardinal points. I would recommend my distant patrons to make their purchases in the Autumn for Spring sales, as it is decidedly the best Season.

Our packing, for which a charge barely covering the expense is always made, is done in the most faithful manner, by aim being to make my packages proof against even the recklessness of Railroad employes—more than this I don't think I can safely promise Confirmatory of this assurance, it may be performed in me to mention that the excellence of my packing has been publicly noticed in many papers, and that I rarely hear of injury to my Trees on arriving at their destination, even though they may have been long on the way

The prices for the quantities specified in the annexed List must be understood to be literal and invariable, the rate per thousand not being admissable for any number of hundreds less—and they are based on the positive condition that the selections of varieties shall be left to ourselves: pledging ourselves, however, that the choice of our correspondents shall be complied with as nearly as may be, and that our selections be composed of the best leading popular sorts, in due proportion, with more or less of the new popular kinds, according to our ability to supply them.

To Correspondents.

FIRST.—Write your Name, Place of Residence, County and State, so legibly that it cannot be mistaken. Disappointments not attributable to us may otherwise ensue

SECOND.—Give particular directions as to the mode, route or line, by which you would have your packages conveyed, and to whose care you would have them consigned. For want instruction in these particulars, we shall forward them according to the best of our judgment; and we expressly desire it to be understood that all responsibility on our part, as to the goods, ceases on delivering them to the forwarders Tecumseh, and that to the forwarders alone purchasers must look for all losses by detention, injury, or miscarriage

THIRD.—Inform us immediately of an error, omission or oversight, should any occur, when it shall be properly adjusted

FOURTH.—Our terms of payment are Cash, or a satisfactory note or acceptance, payable at Bank Remittance by Check or Draft, should always be made payable to our order

The Rural American.

THE best practical, agricultural and family paper in the United States, is the RURAL AMERICAN, published at Utica N Y It is issued on the 1st and 15th of each month at the very low price of 50 cents a year in clubs; and it is about the same size, and contains quite as much reading matter as the $2 agricultural weeklies of the day. The second volume commenced in January, and it is now circulated in all the States and territories in the Union, and bids fair to outstrip, eventually, in circulation all similar papers The great feature of its present success is the offering of a very valuable COLLECTION OF REMEDIES FOR THE CURE OF THE DISEASES OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS, at 50 cts FREE to all persons who get up a small club of four subscribers for six months, at 25 cts. each, and remit $1 therefor. The proprietor has been about ten years collecting the materials, at a great cost, for said work, comprising about 300 letters and receipts, from the most extensive stock breaders of of the U States and Europe, and is worth ten times its price to any stock breeder in the country. All the diseases to which cattle, horses sheep and swine are subject are embraced in the collection, and plain directions given to effect their cures Samples of the Rural American, containing the details of this liberal offer to its club agents, will be sent free to all applicants. Local agents are wanted in every town in the United States, and very liberal terms are offered to traveling agents in every State. Apply to the Editor

COME AND SEE IT WORK.

R. L. HALL, Proprietor.

Tecumseh, July 1857. 340tf

Lenawee County Farmer.

Tecumseh, Michigan, September, 1857.

The Apple worm, and the Treatment of Apples infested by it.

FRIEND JOHNSTONE:—In reading your notes in the last Farmer on apple worm, it occurred to me that something more should have been said and hence I propose to add a word. In these notes it is said, "Where the injured fruit are destroyed as fast as they fall by being fed to cattle or hogs the number of insects are lessened in that orchard at least." This it would seem is taking it for granted that all wormy fruit will or ought to be thus disposed of, which in some cases would take seven eights of the entire crop and in many cases more than half. A course not likey to be pursued while it remains true that wormy apples are better than none and will sell readily at 25 to 50cts., per bushel. Doubtless therefore some at least of the readers of the Farmer would like to learn all that is now known relative to the management of such as not intended for hogs or cattle.

For the purpose of entrapping the moth from which issues the apple worm, we take our summer and fall apples directly from the trees and place them in a room in the barn and all barrels, boxes &c., in which winter or other apples have been kept for a longer or shorter period are kept in this room from the first of June until the last of August. And all the fixtures of whatever sort or kind that are in the room when the apples are brought in, we intend to have kept there during this period (1st of June to 1st September.) And here at a window (to which they resort immediately on leaving their cocoons) we have already this season slain we think over two thousand and still they continue to come out from 25 to 100 per day according to the temperature of the weather. And thus continue to come being less and less from day to day until the final winding up (from last years crop) which will probably be about the first of August, other seasons about the middle of July. Soon after this period they will begin to come from the new fruit, thus producing another generation the same season. These statements are not made on the authority of A. R. or C. Atkinson, of Indianapolis, Ogden & Co. nor the books, but from actual experience. And hence it is easy to see why it is that fall and winter fruit is injured vastly more than summer fruit. I know it is said in your Notes that 'early and autumn apples suffer most,' and similar statements are made in some of the books, but I have yet to hear of the first case where facts do not prove that which is 'right opposite.' Usually the moths begin to appear about the 1st of June, and continue to increase in number some 20 or 25 days after which they decrease and continue to do so for about the same length of time.

In the Fruit Garden we are told, 'There are but two ways of destroying them, one is at pruning time in March to search carefully for the cocoons & destroy them; and the other is to pick up promptly all fallen wormy fruits and destroy them.' Now these instructions I think it highly important to follow carefully, and for several years past we have spent several days in each season searching for cocoons but have never been able in any one season to find more than 25 or 30 grubs, while in disposing of the 2,000 and upwards not more than two hours time were occupied. B. COOK.

Jackson, Mich, July, 1857.

[The practice of Mr. Cook, will be recognized by every orchardist as correct, we thank him very much for his statement. The trouble is, that every one who grows fruit, will not perform the work removing the appies as fast as they fall from the trees, and hence it was recomended that they should be consumed by cattle or hogs. But his plan is much superior, and of course will not only save a larger quantity of fruit suitable for market, but also for cutting and, drying and other puposes. It will be noted that Mr. Cook speaks of two generations in the season, one which comes from the old fruit of last year, and which comes out early and attack the summer and fall fruit. Of coarse these are less numerous than the second generation which hatched out from eggs of the first, and at a season highly favorable to their developement with fewer chances of destruction to contend against than the winter brings. Their superior numbers account for their greater destructiveness, and also is a very powerful reason why fallen fruit of the summer season should be cleared off, before the insect seeks the ground to undergo its changes.]

Effects of Clover on Animals.

Some late writers have taken the position that clover hay produces a most injurious effect on domestic animals, particularly horses; and that to this cause the great increase of diseased horses is to be attributed. We lately heard a farmer affirm, that he believed the introduction of clover hay into general cultivation the greatest curse yet inflicted on the country, and assigned as a reason for this singular opinion, its effects on animals when used for fodder. Late English writers have attributed to this kind of hay the prevalence of heaves in horses, and the great increase of other diseases that effect the respiratory organs.

This is a most important subject, and should receive a full investigation. Clover is too important a plant to be discarded or condemned, except upon the most satisfactory evidence. Its value as a fertilizer and a preparative for wheat, to say nothing of its use for pasture and hay, would demand that it should not be condemned unheard. For ourselves we have very little belief in the injurious properties assigned to clover. We have used it constantly for pasture and hay, more than thirty years, and never to our knowledge, has any animal suffered from it; certainly no horse has been troubled with the heaves, when fed on it, or while in our possession. As hay for sheep, we have considered it unrivaled, and should have no fears that any stock would not winter well with a supply of well cured clover hay.

And here lies, we think, the great source of objection to clover hay. It is too often imperfectly cured. To save the leaves and the heads, which are apt to fall in handling or curing, the hay is put into the barn while the large stems are full of moisture or the natural juices, and the fermentation which ensues causes the whole mass to become damp; and if not spoiled wholly, it becomes mouldy, black, and when used raises such a dust, it is no wonder that horses and cattle are choked, or their lungs destroyed. Our experience shows that clover may be perfectly cured without loosing any of its valuable parts; cured so that when fed out no more dust will be flying than from timothy or herds grass, and we shall be slow to believe that from such hay any injury to animals ever ensues.—Ohio Valley Farmer.

REMARKS.—Clover hay has been cultivated and fed to stock too long to be discarded at this late day. When properly cured, clover will ever rank among the best kinds of fodder that can be produced.—Ed. Rural American.

Headache, Sick Headache, Foul Stomach,

PITTSBURGH, PA., May 1, 1855.

DR. J. C. AYER. SIR: I have been repeatedly cured of the worst headache, any, how can have by a dose or two of your Pills. All who take them in foul stomach, sick, they cleanse at once. If they will cure others as they do me, the fact is worth knowing.

WM. W. FRISBEE,

Clerk of Steamer Clarion.

Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaints.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

WASHINGTON, D. C., 7 Feb., 1856.

SIR: I have used your Pills in my general and hospital practice ever since your Pills came, and cannot hesitate to say they are the best cathartic we employ. Their regulating action in disorder is quick and decided, consequently in all bilious derangements of that they are an admirable remedy for derangements of that organ. Indeed, I have seldom found a case of bilious disorder so obstinate that it did not readily yield to them.

ALONZO BALL, M. D.,

Fraternally yours, Physician of the Marine Hospital.

Dysentery, Relax, and Worms.

POST OFFICE, HARTLAND, LIV. CO., MICH., Nov. 16, 1855.

DR. AYER: Your Pills are the perfection of medicine. They have done my wife more good than I can tell you. She had been sick and pining away for months. Went off to be doctored at great expense, but got no better. She then commenced taking your Pills, which soon cured her. She by expelling large quantities of worms (dead) from her body. They afterwards cured her and our two children of bloody dysentery. One of our neighbors had it bad, and my wife, cured him with two doses of your Pills, while others around us paid from five to twenty dollars doctors' bills, and lost much time, without being cured entirely even then. Such a medicine as yours, which is actually good and honest, will be prized here.

From a Forwarding Merchant of St. Louis, Feb. 4, 1856.

DR. AYER: Your Pills are the paragon of all that is great in medicine. They have cured my little daughter of ulcerous sores upon her hands and feet that had proved incurable for years. Her mother has been long grievously afflicted with blotches and pimples on her skin and in her hair. After our child was cured, she also tried your Pills, and they have cured her.

ASA MORGRIDGE.

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and Gout.

From the Rev. Dr. Hawks, of the Methodist Epis. Church.

PULASKI HOUSE, SAVANNAH, GA., Jan. 5, 1856.

HONORED SIR: I should be ungrateful for the relief your skill has given me if I did not report my case to you. A cold settled in my limbs and brought on excruciating neuralgic pains, which ended in chronic rheumatism. Notwithstanding I had the best of physicians, the disease grew worse and worse, until, by the advice of your excellent agent in Baltimore, Dr. Mackenzie, I tried your Pills. Their effects were slow but sure. By persevering in the use of them I am now entirely well.

DR. AYER: I have been entirely cured by your Pills of a Rheumatic Gout—a painful disease that had afflicted me for years.

VINCENT SLIDELL.

For Dropsy, Plethora, or kindred Complaints, requiring an active purge, they are an excellent remedy.

For Costiveness or Constipation, and as a Dinner Pill, they are agreeable and effectual.

Fits, Suppression, Paralysis, Inflammation, and even Deafness, and Partial Blindness, have been cured by the alterative action of these Pills.

Most of the pills in market contain Mercury, which, although a valuable remedy in skillful hands, is dangerous in a public pill, from the dreadful consequences that frequently follow its incautious use. These contain no poisonery or mineral substance whatever.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

and for the relief of consumptive patients in advanced stages of the disease.

We need not speak to the public of its virtues. Throughout every town, and almost every hamlet of the American States, its wonderful cures of pulmonary complaints have made it already known. Nay, few are the families in any civilized country on this continent without some personal experience of its effects; and fewer yet the communities in any where which have not among them some living trophy of its victory over the subtle and dangerous diseases of the throat and lungs. While it is the most powerful antidote yet known to man for the formidable and dangerous diseases of the pulmonary organs, it is also the pleasantest and safest remedy that can be employed for infants and young persons. Parents should have it in store against the insidious enemy that steals upon them unperceived. We have abundant grounds to believe that CHERRY PECTORAL save more lives by the complaints it prevents than those it cures. Keep it by you, and cure your colds while they are curable, nor neglect them until no human skill can master the incurable canker that fastens on the vitals, eats your life away. All know the dreadful fatality of lung disorders, and as they know too the virtues of this remedy, we need not do more than to assure them it is still made the best it can be. We spare no cost, no care, no toil to produce it the most perfect possible, and thus afford those who rely on it the best agent which our skill can furnish for their cure.

TO all persons afflicted with Sexual Disease such as SPERMATORRHŒA, SEMINAL WEAKNESS, IMPORTANCE, GONORRHŒA, GLEET, SYPHILIS, the Vice of ONANISM, or Self Abuse, &c., &c.,

The HOWARD ASSOCIATION, in view of the awful destruction of human life, caused by Sexual diseases, and the deceptions practised upon the unfortunate victims of such diseases by Quacks, have directed their Consulting Surgeon, as a CHARITABLE ACT worty of their name, to give MEDICAL ADVICE GRATIS, to all persons thus afflicted, who apply by letter, with a description of their condition, (age, occupation, habits of life, &c.,) and in cases of extreme poverty and suffering, to FURNISH MEDICINES FREE OF CHARGE.

The Howard Association is a benevolent Institution, established by special endowment, for the relief of the sick and distressed, afflicted with "Virulent and Epidemic Diseases." It has now a surplus of means, which the Directors have voted to expend in advertising the above notice. It is needless to add that the Association commands the highest Medical skill of the age, and will furnish the most approved modern treatment.

Just Published, by the Association, a Report on Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, the Vice of Onanism, Masturbation or Self Abuse, and other Diseases of the Sexual Organs, by the Consulting Surgeon, which will be sent by mail, (in a sealed envelop,) FREE OF CHARGE, on the receipt of Two Stamps for postage.

Address, Dr. GEO. R. CALHOUN, Consulting Surgeon, Howard Association, No 2 South NINTH Street, Philadelphia, Pa. By order of the Directors.

EZRA D. HARTWELL, President.

GEO. FAIRCHILD, Secretary. 340y

A Retired Physician, 75 years of age having lost his Father, two Brothers, Daughter, Son-in-law, Nephews and Nieces, by that dreadful disease, CONSUMPTION, and suffering with a COUGH himself, determined to visit the East Indies, Egypt and Japan, where he discovered a Preventive and Certain Cure for Colds, Coughs, Bronchitis, Consumption Nervous Debility and Asthma. His cough was cured immediately; he returned, cured his Relatives, who inherited the disease, and in connection with his son have employed it in their practice, curing thousands of cases considered hopeless by others. For the purpose of rescuing as many of his suffering fellow beings as possible he is sending the Recipe to all who wish it for 10 cents; 6 of it to pay the postage, and the balance printing.

Patent Medicines.

A Medicine that Never Debilitates.

DR. SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR, OR LIVER REMEDY.

HAS ALL THE GOOD QUALITIES OF A Purgative medicine, answering the purposes of any Cathartic without the debilitating effects experienced from most purgatives It acts slowly and gently, but surely, moving the bowels to carry off all the secreted matter, at the same time, stimulating the Liver to a proper performance of its functions.

The Invigorator cures the Sick Headache. Take one or two tea-spoonsful at each attack and it will soon disappear. For an overloaded stomache, or when food rises or sours, take the Invigorator after eating, and it will not prove disagreeable or oppressive. For Heartburn, Palpitation, or difficult breathing take a teaspoonful once or twice daily. For Loss of Appetite, Langu or Listlessness, the medicine is invaluable It will restore the appetite and make the food digest well.—Nightmare take a teaspoonful on retiring, and the demons of dream-land will all be fairies. After eating a heavy dinner, take a dose of Invigorator and it will relieve all oppression or fullness. The Invigorator is a Liver Remedy of unequalled virtue, acting directly on that organ, curing Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, Dysentery, Piles Worms, and all Female Obstructions, for which it has no equal.

We know there is nothing now before the American public, prepared with such skill by a scientific man, particularly for diseases of the Liver, as Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver Remedy. It has attained a reputation second to no other article in the world, simply because it rests on its own merit. To convince all by trial that it is all its proprietors claim it to be, if any of our readers are suffering from such diseases as are described in Dr. Sanford's advertisement, we know of no remedy that will so surely cure as the Invigorator.

There has lately been brought to our notice a medicine that seems to possess wonderful, curative and healing properties in diseases of the Liver, stomache and Digestive Organs. It came to us with so many testimonials in its favor that we have noted its effects in some of the worst cases of continued debility, caused by deranged liver, and in every instance the effect was to relieve or give a permanent cure, Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver remedy is what we refer to. We always have been credulous about cures by patent medicines, but we are convinced that this medicine, for family use, is not over rated by the host of recommendations it has. Our advice is, for all troubled with Indigestion, Debility or Bowel Complaint, to get a bottle and try it; our word for it, relief will be experienced.

BLESSINGS To The Invalids who use Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, for it will relieve them of their pains as soon as it is taken into their stomach. Pain and misery cannot exist where the Invigorator is used, for it will as surely drive them away, as day light will banish darkness, as this there can be no doubt to those who try it, for it carries conviction with every dose taken. Another evidence is the thousands of certificates from those who use it or have been cured by it.—Try one bottle, if it does not benefit, then we are mistaken.

CASH & READY-PAY

CUSTOMERS

B. J. BIDWELL,

Chicago Street, Tecumseh.

I am now opening a Large, and Genera Assortment of

Dry Goods and Groceries,

and shall be receiving from week to week through the Season, any Goods that may be wanted, from the Eastern Manufacturers and Jobbers of

New York, Boston,

and Other Cities in the East.

I have tried during Nineteen Years of my life the various modes of doing business.

Firstly for Cash.

Secondly on Short Credit.

Thirdly, had to take Long Credit, Orders and Accounts.

Lastly, I have been compelled to wait for payment of Goods sold on Six Months time long enough for a man to visit California, get rich, and return. Before payment could be forced or coaxed.

Now I wish to say, to my numerous friends and patrons, that I am thoroughly convinced that the mode of buying goods on time is both injurious to the buyer and seller.

I will hereafter Sell for Ready pay, at such prices that will defy all competition in the Town, State, or the United States.

No one should buy a dollars worth of Goods without calling at the

Great Western Cash Store,

and get the prices. Some are so unfortunate as to be compelled to trade at long credit stores—to those I would say, Call and see what you can save by having the Ready or something as good, to use where you please.

Call one and all, I wish to see the light of your countenance, and the cash from your pockets.

From the Golden Prize

To Minnie.

Sister, we have passed together
Childhood's gay and sunny hours,
Hand in hand have we been roaming
Over a pathway bright with flowers!
Thou has shared me joy and sorrow
That my childish heart has known;
When the sky was dark above me,
I have turned to thee alone.

Sister, many years have fitted
Like a vision of the night,
Since this vale of lights and shadows
Opened on our infant sight.
We have wanderded on together,
Joined in hand, and joined in heart.
But the years have quickly vanished—
Soon forever we must part.

Sister, other loves will greet thee
In thy journey here below,
Other hearts will fondly bless thee,
Other tears for thee will flow;
But thou'lt never know a deeper
Love than that thy sister bears;
None will breathe thy name as fondly
As 'tis breathed within my prayers.

Sister, at thy side forever
On this earth I may not roam;
Soon, for life has many changes,
We may mourn a broken home.
O'er the world our little household
May be scattered far and wide;
Every link that binds us, severed,—
Floating each on life's great tide.

Sister, other ties will bind us,
Other homes will claim our love.
But the chain that here is broken,
Will be joined again—above.
Soon our barks will drift asunder,
Tossed upon lifes ebbing wave,
And full soon we may be resting
Each within a distant grave.

Sister, do not cease to love me,
Do not let my mem'ry sleep—
Life is very bright before me,
Yet I feel as I could weep.
But I would not bring thee sadness,
Would not cloud thy spirit's light,
Darkness o'er the earth is steal'ng,
Sister, dear, a sweet good night.

JESSIE.

The Great Western Plains

The steamboat arrivals at St. Louis from the Upper Missouri, give some idea of the vast extent of country drained by that mighty river and its tributaries.—One boat started where the river was narrowed down to only sufficient width to only allow an ascending boat to wind in order to change its direction, and then followed down the broadening stream for 2,500 miles until it mingles its muddy waters with the Mississippi, and in sufficient volume to give color and character to that great artery of the continent, even when by many mouths it is swallowed in the Gulf.

Col Galphin, who has well explored our great western plains, stretching from the frontier of Kansas and the heart of Nebraska to the Rocky Mountains, in a letter to the St. Louis Democrat graphically sketches their characteristics. The plains occupy a longitudinal parallelogram of nearly a thousand miles in width, and extending from the Texan to the Arctic coast, present an area equal to the twenty-four states east of the Mississippi. They have a slight slope from the west to the east, and abound in rivers and streams, which serve like the Nile to irregulate rather than drain the neighboring surface, having few affluents, and running from west to east in shallow, broad beds, through long, flat, narrow basins. They are destitute of timber, even single trees being scarce, though thick clad with nutritious grasses, and swarming with animal life. Their soil is chiefly a fine calcareous mold admirably adapted for pasturage, and good, farming, arable land is found along the banks of the river.

Colonel Galphin describes the climate to be, in many respects, like Egypt, rainless, favorable to longevity, intellectual and physical development, and stimulative of a high social civilization. Storms are rare, except during the melting of the snow upon the crest of the Rocky Mountains. These plains, commonly regarded as deserts irreclaimable, he describes swarm with animal life; and he calculates the buffalo which find their living upon them at twenty millions, and other more numerous wild animals at more than fifty millions, all of which subsist mainly upon the gramma or buffalo grass, which the dry atmosphere crisps into a highly nutritious hay. A million of Indians have, until lately, subsisted altogether upon the game which they furnished, and they are capable of sustaining an immense pastoral population. Six tenths of the food of the human family, the colonel thinks, is, or ought to be, animal, the result of pastoral agriculture; and as the Northwest is now the granary of the world, so, he maintains, will the far West furnish its supplies of animal food, consisting of meat, milk, butter, cheese, poultry, eggs, wool and honey.

These plains, without a single abrupt mountain, timbered space, desert or lake, running smoothly out to the navigable Missouri, Mississippi, and St. Lawrence, and to the Texan coast, not a portion of whose whole sweep of surface is more than a thousand miles from the best navigation, must become the pastoral garden of the world.

They are everywhere adapted to sustain a great pastoral population. Adobe bricks for dwellings, impervious to heat or cold, can be made anywhere; plaster, lime, clay and sand, exist beneath nearly every acre; bituminous coal is abundant, buffalo dung is scattered everywhere, and wood fuel is found plentifully by digging, for the trees are stunted by the dry atmosphere, while the roots spread out in all directions.

Mr. Galphin does not claim for these vast plains the cardinal basis of the future empire of commerce and industry, but maintains, from their ample dimensions and positions, their climate, abundance of fuel, building material and animal life, that they are not only adapted to be the home of millions of happy freemen, but that they will be "the pasture field of the world."

An Irish Highwayman.

Doctor W——, the Bishop of Cashel, having occasion to visit Dublin, accompanied by his wife and daughter, determined to perform the journey by easy stages, in his own carriage, and with his own sleek and well-fed horses, instead of trusting his bones to the tender mercies of an Irish post-chase, and the unbroken garrons used for drawing these crazy vehicles.

One part of his route was through a wild and mountainous district; and the bishop, being a very humane man, and considerate of his cattle, made a point of quitting his carriage at the foot of every hill and walking to the top. On one of those occasions he had loitered to look at the extensive prospect, indulging in a revere upon its sterile appearance, and the change that agriculture might produce, and in so doing suffered his family and servants to be considerably in advance; perceiving this he hastened to make up for lost time, and was stepping out with his best speed when a fellow leaped from behind a pile of loose stones, and accompanying the flourish of a huge club with a demoniac yell, demanded "Money!" with a ferocity of tone and manner perfectly appaling.

The bishop gave the robber all the silver he had loose in his pocket, hoping that it would satisfy him; but he was mistaken, for no sooner had the ruffian stowed it away in a capacious rent in his tattered garment, than with another whirl of his bludgeon, and an awful oath, he exclaimed—

"And is it with the likes of this I'm after letting you off! a few paltry tinpennies! It's the gould I'll have, or I'll spatter your brains. Arrah, don't stand shivering and shaking there, like a Quaker in the ague, but lug out your purse, you divil, immediately or I'll bate you as blue as a whetstone."

His lordship most reluctatly yieldid his well-filled purse, saying in tremulous accents: "My good fellow, there it is, don't ill use me—I've given you all, pray let me depart."

"Fair and softly, if you plase: as sure as I'm not a good fellow, I haven't done with you yet. I must search for your note case, for I'll engage you have a few bits of paper payable at the bank; so hand it over, or you'll sup sorrow to-night."

It was given up; a glance at the road showed that all hope of assistance from his servants was unvailing, the carriage had disappeared, but the bishop made an instinctive movement as though anxious to escape from further pillage.

"Wait a while or may be I shall get angry with you; hand over your watch and sales, then you may trudge."

Now it happened that the divine felt a particular regard for his watch—not so much from its being of considerable value, but because it had been presented to him by his first patron—and he ventured to expostulate.

"Surely you have taken enough; leave me my watch, and I'll forgive all you have done."

"Who ax'd your forgiveness, you ould varmint? Would you trifle with my good nature? Don't force me to do anything I'd be sorry for—but, without any more bother, just give me the watch, or by all that's holy—"

And he jerked the bludgeon from his right hand to his left, spat in the horny palm of the former, and re-grasped the formidable weapon as though seriously bent on bringing it into operation; this action was not unheeded by his victim—he drew forth the golden time-piece, and with a heavy sigh, handed it to his spoiler, who, rolling the chain and seals round it, found some wider aperture in his apparel into which he crammed it; and giving himself a shake to ascertain that it had found, by its own gravity, a place of safety, he said—

"And now be off with you, and thank the blissed saints that you lave me with'out a scratch on your skin, or the value of your little finger hurt."

It needed no persuasion to induce the bishop to turn his back upon the despoiler of his worldly goods, and having no weight to carry he set off at what equestrians term "a hane canter;" scarcely, however, had he reached the middle of the precipitous road, when he perceived his persecutor running after him. He endeavored to re-double his speed. Alas! what chance had he in a race with one whose muscles were as strong and elastic as highly tempered steel?

"Stop, you nimble-footed thief of the world!" roared the robber—"stop, I tell yo! I've a parting word with you yet."

The exhausted and defenseless clergyman finding it impossible to continue his flight, suddenly came to a stand-still.—The fellow approached, and his face, instead of its former ferocity, was lit up with a whimsical roguishness of expression as he said—"And is it likely I'd let you off with a better coat on your back than my own? and will I be after losing the chance of that elegant hat and wig? Off with them this moment, and then you'll be quit o'me!"

The footpad quickly divested the bishop of his single-breasted coat—laid violent hands upon the clerical hat and full-buttoned wig—put them on his own person, and then insisted on seeing his late apparel used in their stead; and with a loud laugh ran off, as though his last feat had been the most meritorious of his life.

Thankful at having escaped with unbroken bones, his lordship was not long in overtaking his carriage; the servants could not repress their master in such strange and motley attire; but there was in his face such evidences of terror and suffering, that they speedily checked their risible inclinations, particularly when they learnt by a few brief words the danger he had undergone. "My dear W——," exclaimed his affectionate wife, after listening to the account of the perils to which her husband had been exposed "for heaven's sake take off that filthy jacket, and throw it out of the window.—You can put my warm cloak over your shoulders till we reach the next stage, and then you will be able to purchase some habit better suited to your station and calling."

"That is more easily said than done, my dove," he replied; "I have lost all the money I possessed; not a single guinea is left me to pay our expenses to-night. My watch, too, that I so dearly prized! Miserable man that I am!"

"Never mind your watch, or anything else, just now—only pull off that mass of filth, I implore you; who knows what horrid contagion we may all catch if you persist in wearing it?"

"Take it off, dear papa," observed the daughter, "but don't throw it away; it may lead to the detection of the wretch who robbed you."

The obnoxious garment was removed; the young lady was about to place it under the seat, when she heard a jingling noise that attracted her attention, and, on examination, found secreated, in various parts of the coat, not only the watch, pocket-book, purse, and silver, of which her father had been deprived, but a yellow canvass bag, such as is used by farmers, containing about thirty guines.

The surprise and joy of all parties may be imagind; they reached the inn where they proposed stopping for the night, and as the portmanteaus had escaped the dangers of the road, the bishop was speedily able to attire himself canonically. Before the party retired for rest, intelligence arrived a highwayman had been taken, after a desperate resistance—the notice of the police being attracted by the singular appearance of a man of his station sporting a new black coat, and covering his shaggy, carroty locks with the well-powdered and orthodox peruke of the right reverend the Bishop of Cashel.

Religion itself is but a state of affections. I once met a beautiful peasant woman in the valley of the Arno, and asked the number of her children. "I have three here, and two in Paradise," she calmly replied, with a tone and manner of touching simplicity. Her faith was of the heart.

May Be So.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

"Next time you go out you'll buy me a wagon, wont you mother?" said my little boy to me one day.

I did not want to say "no" and destroy his happy feelings, and I was not prepared to say "yes," and so I gave the evasive reply so often-times used under such circumstances—"May be so," and which was meant rather a negative than an affirmative. The child was satisfied, for he gave my words the meaning that he wished them to have. In a little while after, I had forgotten all about it. Not so my boy To him the "may be so" was "yes" and he set his heart confidently on receiving the wagon the next time I should go out. This happened to be on the afternoon of that very day. It was towards evening when I returned. That moment I heard his pattering feet and gleeful voice in the entry.

"Where's my wagon?" said he as I entered, a shade of disappointment falling suddenly upon his excited, happy face.

"What wagon my dear?" I asked.

"My wagon. The wagon you promised to buy me.

"I didn't promise to buy you a wagon, my son.

"Oh! yes you did, mother, you promised me this morning"

Tears were already in his eyes, and his face wore a look of distressing disappointment.

"I promised to buy you a wagon? I am sure I promised nothing about it," I replied, confidently. "What in the world put that in your head?"

"Didn't I ask you?" said the child, the tears now overflowing his cheeks.

"Yes, I believe you did ask me something about a wagon but I didn't promise to buy you one."

"Oh yes you did, mother. You said 'May be so.'"

"But 'may be so' doesn't mean yes."

At this the little fellow uttered a distressing cry. His heart was almost broken by disappointment. He had interpreted my words according to his own wishes, and not according to their real meaning.

Unprepared for an occurrence of this kind, I was not in the mood to fully sympathize with my child. To be met thus, at the moment of my return disturbed me

"I didn't promise to buy you a wagon, and you must stop crying about it," said I; seeing he had given way to his feelings, and was crying in a loud voice.

But he cried on. I went up stairs to lay off my things, and he followed, still crying.

"You must hush now," said I more positively. "I cannot permit this. I never promised to buy you a wagon."

"But you said may be so," sobbed out the child.

"'May be so' and 'yes' are two different things. If I had said I would buy you a wagon there would have been some reason in your disappointment, but I have said no such thing!"

He paused to listen, but as I ceased speaking his crying was renewed.

"You must stop this now. There is no use in it, and I will not have it," said I resolutely.

My boy choked down for a few moments at this, and half stifled his grief, but, overmastering him, it flowed on again as wildly as ever. I felt impatient.

"Stop this moment, I say!" and I took hold of his arm firmly. My will is stong, and when a little excited often leads me beyond where I would go, in moments of reflection. By my way of speaking he saw I was in earnest, and if he did not obey me punishment would follow. So with what must have been a powerful effort for one so young, he stifled the utterance of his grief. But the storm within raged none the less violently, and I could see his little frame quiver as he strove to repress the rising sobs.

Turning away from me he went and sat down on a low seat in the corner of the room. I saw his form in the glass as I stood before it to arrange my hair after laying aside my bonnet; and for the first time my feelings were touched. There was an abandonment in his whole attitude an air of grief about him that afflicted me with pity and tenderness.

"Poor child!" I sighed, "his heart is almost broken. I ought to have said yes or no and then all would have been settled."

"Come," said I, after a few moments, reaching my hand towards the child; "let us go down and look out for father! He will soon be home."

I spoke kindly and cheerfully. But he never moved, looked up, nor gave the smallest sign that he heard me.

'Oh, well,' said I, with some impatience in my voice, 'it doesn't matter at all. If you had rather set there than come down in the parlor and look for dear father, you can please yourself.

Turning as I spoke, I left the chamber and went down stairs. Seating myself by a window, I looked for, and endeavored to look unconcerned and cheerful. I saw nothing but the face of my grieving child, and could think of nothing but his sorrow and disappointment.

"Nancy" said I to one of my domestics who happened to come in the parlor to some question, "I wish you would go to the store next block, and buy a wagon. His heart is almost broken one"

The girl, always willing when spoken to, ran off to obey my wishes, and in a little while come back with the article wanted.

"Now," said I, "go up to my room and tell Neddy that I've something for him. Don't mention the wagon; I want to take him by surprise."

Nancy went bounding up the stairs, and I placed the wagon in the centre of the room, where it would meet the child's eye on the moment of his entrance, and then sat down to await his coming and enjoy his surprise and delight.

After the lapse of about a minute, I heard Nancy coming slowly.

"Neddy's asleep," said she, looking in at the door.

"Asleep!" I felt greatly disappointed.

"Yes. ma'am. He was on the floor asleep. I took him up and laid him on your bed"

'Then he is over his troubles,' said I attempting to find relief for my feelings in this utterance. But no such relief came.

Taking the wagon in my hand, I went up to the chamber where he lay, and bent over him. The signs of grief were still upon his innocent face, and every now and then a sigh or a sob gave evidence that even sleep had not hushed entirely the storm which swept over him.

"Neddy!" I spoke to him in a voice of tenderness, hoping my words might reach his ear.

"Neddy, dear, I have bought you a wagon."

But his senses were locked. Taking him up, I undressed him, and then, after kissing his lips, brow and cheeks, laid him on his little bed, and placed the wagon on the pillow beside him.

Even at the late hour at which I retired on that evening were my feelings oppressed by the incidents I have described.

My "May be so," uttered in order to avoid giving the direct answer my child wanted, had occasioned him far more pain than a positive refusal of his request by any means could have done.

"I will be more careful in future," said I, as I lay thinking about the occurrence, 'how I create false hopes. My yea shall be yea, and my nay, nay. Of those cometh not evil.'

In the morning when, I awoke, I found Neddy in possession of his waggon. He was running with it around the room, as happy as if a tear had never been upon his cheek. I looked at him for a moment without speaking. At last seeing that I was awake, he bounded to the bed-side, and kissing me, said:

'Thank you, dear mother, for buying me this wagon. You are a good mother!'

I must own to have felt some doubts on the subject of Neddy's compliment at the time. Since this experience, I have been more careful how I answer the petions of my children; and avoid the 'May be so.' 'I'll see about it,' and other such evasive answers that come so ready to the lips—The good result I have experienced in many instances.

Truth being founded on a rock, you may boldly dig to see its foundations without fear of destroying the edifice; but falsehood being laid on the sand, if you examine its foundations you cause its fall.

The Mussulman will speak of an ignorant Arab, who being asked how he knew anything about the existence of a God, replied:—"Just as I know by the tracks in the sand whether a man or a beast has passed there, so, when I survey the heavens with its bright stars, and the earth with its productions, do I feel the existance and power of a God."

We often speak of being settled in life—we might as well think of casting anchor in the midst of the Atlantic Ocean, or talk of the permanent situation a stone that is rolling down a hill.

Musings in a Storm.

The Storm is pouring-thick and fast
Its torrents from the upper sky;
Yet borne upon the raging blast,
I'll passing, and will soon by,
Oh, I have loved its dreary roar!
Have its dark and restless night
And almost wish, when they are o'er,
To curse the quiet, laughing light,
Whose very cheerfulness to me
Is sadness, for my soul is sad,
Until 'tis even a grief to see
What cannot make the spirit glad,
For still amid the torrent's tide,
Its darkness, and its angry moan,
I'd linger on, and aye abide,
Nor feel that I am all alone,
For there's a strange sad sympathy
Betwixt the fitful storm and me.

The sun was made to cheer the glad,
The Zephyr's breath, to fan the gay,
But oh! the heart that's sere and sad
Brooks not the Zephyr, nor the day,—
And evening stars so pure and bright,
Sweet beaming in their far off heaven,
May shed their mild and radiant light
To tell of hopes, and sips forgiven,
But all in vain-their light is shed
Upon the soul whose hopes are dead,
And their bright radiance all too pure
For but the sinless to endure.—

But when the thick clouds rolling black
Have driven the wandering sunbeams back,
Amid the tempest and the moan
Of hollow winds, shut out, alone,
By these, from all the world around,
Nor heeding of its sight or sound,—
'Tis then the heart is something free,
To brood upon itself, nor fear
Betrayment, all unconsciously,
By rising sigh, or falling tear,
'Tis then the feelings, crushed and pent,
Pour forth like many waters rushing,
And joy and sorrow, strangely blent,
Are mingled in their warm wild gushing,
And meteor hopes, that rose and fled
Like spectral visions of the dead,
The promises of early youth
Of seeming joy, and seeming truth,
And memories of the dreary past,
Sad memories, cherished to the last,
Chilled by the cold false world in vain,
Burst fresh upon the heart again.

Oh, storm and tempest! On thy brow
The seal of blackness hath been set!
I've loved thee from my youth, and now
I feel how well I love thee yet —
The lightning's flash I've loved to see,
And joyed to hear the thunder's roar,
For when they come they bring to me
A something I have felt before,
And I forget there is around
A world, with which I live and dwell,
Heeding alone the the hollow sound
That binds me with its magic spell,
And dreary is the hour hour at last,
When both the spell and storm are past

Manslaughter.

A man named Maurice Cochrane was killed on Thursday afternoon in a qurrel by another man named John Bush. The affair took place near the Milwaukee depot about two o'clock. The murdered man was in the employ of Seymour & Price, Bush is of the firm of Doty & Bush, both firms are engaged in the lime business. A considerable rivalry has been kept up lately between the two establishments, and it was this that led to the fatal occurrence above. A dispute a arose between Cochrane and Bush in regard to the delivery of a load of lime by the former to one of Bush's customers, from words they came to blows, when Bush dealt Cochrane a blow under the ear, dislocating his neck between his neck and the first and second vertribæ — After he fell his assilliant committed other violence upon his person by kicking him in the face in a most brutal manner.

The deceased leaves a wife and two children in moderate circumstances.

A jury was summoned who rendered a verdict that said Maurice came to his death from a blow inflicted upon him by John Bush, and that said Bush is guilty of the crime of manslaughter.

Bush has been arrested and committed to await his trial on the charge.

The Michigan Historical Society.

It is a source of congratulation to the citizens of our beautiful peninsula, that public attention has at length been called to a more full and efficient organization of a Historical society in this State — Michigan boasts on antiquity running far back into the early settlement of the western continent, confined however, so far as white inhabitants are concerned, to the early French Missionary and trading posts.

It has also an Indian history and traditions worthy of remembrance. Identified with the French colonial war; the war of the revolution, and of 1812—together with numerous Indian wars, they all abound with incidents and events of individual character and biography which should not forgotten.

Michigan also, in common with our sisters of the great confederacy, owes it to our national character and reputation to collect and preserve whatever may be, or be brought within her borders, pertaining to the illustration or perpetuation of national incident, history or character.

Many of our sister States have already, in active and successful operation societies devoted to these objects, and it cannot be supposed that Michigan, who does not acknowledge herself inferior in taste, intelligence, or public spirit, to any of them, will long consent to remain in the back ground in this respect.

There was a Historical Society of Michigan Incorporated in June 1828, but having been suffered to fall into decay, we learn by a circular of its officers, that it was re-organized in August, 1857.

A lapse of Thirty years has passed, with comparatively little accomplished in this direction. In the mean time, the aged pioneers, whose life and memory reach far back amid the struggles, deprivations, and stirring incidents of our early history are fast passing away. As is well said in the Society's circular, much has already been forever lost, but much also may still be gathered in and preserved.

Well then does it become us to redeem the time, and for one we would express the thanks of a grateful community to those public spirited gentlemen, who have so opportunely applied themselves, to this much needed task. We cannot perhaps do better, than to give the wishes and wants of the society in the committees' own words:

"That all persons may see, with some degree of precision, the nature of the collection we desire to make, we beg leave to say that we especially desire the following:

1st. Facts and materials illustrative of Indian history, character, manners, religion, and language; such as arms, implements, works of art, dress, ornament, ancient deeds to or from them, the meaning of Indian names, notices of their distinguished Chiefs, &c., &c.,

2d. Pamphlets, manuscripts, diaries, narratives, and other writings, illustrative our early history—of the period before the war of 1812, of the war itself, and of the subsequent period.

3d. We desire to have written down, narratives and statements of old men and early settlers still living, but who must soon pass away, giving any facts within their knowledge, illustrating our early annals, including biographical notices and anecdotes of prominent men actors in our early history.

4th. Histories of the settlement of each town in the State, including events in Indian or early history for which it is remarkable; its first settlement, when made, by whom; with notices of its peculiar or prominent men, its progress in settlement, present condition, and every incident of interest, however minute.

5th. Histories and facts bearing upon the history of all the religious denominations, churches and societies in the State, including reports and journals of conventions, synods, conferences, associations, and other bodies, and notices of leading bishops, priests, ministers and members.

6th. Essays, statements, and papers upon any subject or period in our history, including, also, scientific observations and discoveries.

7th Files, and bound volumes of old newspapers, and copies of every thing hereafter published in the State, and we propose to preserve complete copies and files of every publication, so far as they are furnished us by the publishers.

8th. Books, phamphlets, magazines, papers and maps, illustrative of Michigan, and north-western history, and especially all works on American, Canadian, and Indian history; and books of travel and adventure in the North-West. Our design is to obtain a complete collection in these departments.

9th. Portraits, pictures, engravings, lithographs, autographs, arms, relics and curiosities of every kind connected with the history of this State, or its distinguished men.

10th. Every variety of contribution illustrative of the natural history of the State, its mineral wealth, its climate and its productions, both vegetable and animal.

In a field where so much is to be done, there is no one that may not do something, and we trust that all will be anxious to contribute towards an object so desirable."

Tecumseh, as one of the oldest settled places in this portion of the State, ought certainly to be able to add her quota to the archives, and collections of the society, and if any who are in the possession of facts or relics of historical or biographical character will report the same to us, we will cheerfully see that they are placed in the possession of the proper officers of the society. Any one may become a member by remitting one dollar to R. F. Roberts Esq Treasurer at Detroit with a request to that effect, or as a Life member, by the payment of Twenty-Five Dollars, in like manner, and with a like request. Those who prefer to do so, can make these applications and payments to T. M Cooley Esq. at Adrian, who is one of the Curators of the society, and entitled to receive and receipt the same.

TECUMSEH UNOION SCHOOL.—Our Union School commenced in all the Departments on Monday last, with an unusually large attendance and gives every promise of a full and interesting term — Something over one Hundred were in attendance upon the high school on Monday, and it is more than probable that the number will be doubled during the year, so that a short period of time is likely to demonstrate, that those who were anxious to make the liberal provisions afforded by our Union School Building, did not overestimate the educational capabilities and wants of our village.

THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR THE COUNTY OF LENAWEE.—The September term of this Court will be held at Adrian on Tuesday next, Sept, 15, to commence at 10 o'clock. The Grand Jury will also be in session. The celandar for the term is we understand quite light.

A Thrilling Incident.

Returning from a visit in New Orleans we were fortunate to secure passage in a line steamer, with but few passengers — Among the ladies, one especially interested us. She was the widow of a wealthy planter, and was returning with only one child to her fathers house. Her devotion to the child was very touching, and the eyes of her old black nurse would fill with tears as she besought her mistress "not to love that boy to much, or the Lord would take it away from her.

We passed through the canal of Louisville, and stopped for a few moments at the wharf, when the nurse, wishing to see the city, walked out on the guard, at the back of the boat, where, by a sudden effort the child sprang from her arms into the terrible current that sweeps towards the falls, and disappeared immediately — The confusion, which ensued, attracted the attention of a gentleman who was sitting in the fore part of the boat, quietly reading. Rising hastily, he asked for some article the child had worn. The nurse handed him the tiny apron she had torn off in her efforts to retain the babe in her arms. Turning to a splendid Newfoundland dog that was eagerly watching his countenance, he pointed first to the apron, and then to the spot where the child had gone under. In an instant the noble dog leaped into the water and also disappeared. By this time the excitement was intense, and some persons on shore, supposing the dog was lost as the child, they procured a boat and started in search of the body. Just at this moment the dog was seen far away with something in his mouth. Bravely he struggled with the waves, but it was evident that his strength was failing fast, and more than one breast gave a sigh of relief as the boat reached him, and it was announced that he had the child, and that it was still alive. They were brought on board—the dog and child.

Giving a single glance to satisfy herself that the child was really living, the young mother rushed forward, and sinking beside the dog, threw her arms around his neck, and burst into tears. Not many could view the sight unmoved, and as she caressed and kissed his shaggy head, she looked up to his owner and said:

"Oh sir, I must have this dog! I am rich, take all I have—everything but give me my child's preserver."

The gentleman smiled, and, patting his dogs head, said, "I am very glad madam, he has been of service to you but nothing in the world could induce me to part with him."

The dog looked as though he perfectly understood what they were talking about and giving his sides a shake, laid himself down at his master's feet with an expression plainer than words, "No nothing shall part us!"

THE CABLE —There seems to be no doubt that a portion, if not the whole of the Atlantic cable may be recovered.—It is probable also, that another attempt will be made to lay it down this fall. The London Times says:—

"With regard to future operations during the present year, the directors had the advantage of Captain Harrison's great knowledge of the state of the weather, fogs, ice, &c., in the North Atlantic, and his experience enables him to say that the month of November, more particularly when the equinoctial gales have been severe, are usually free from any state of sea or atmosphere that would be injurious to an expedition like the present.

DIED

Died on the 16th of August, Mr. JAMES L. HILLOCK, aged 23, of Consumption.

Mr. HILLOCK, though so young, had been for a number of years a consistent and devoted member of the Baptist Church in this place; and by his amiable disposition, his kind and unassuming deportment, and his manly christian character had endeared him to all who knew him.

During a protracted illness, his patient resignation and submission to the will of his father in heaven, and his joyful anticipation of death—not as a relief from suffering—but as an introduction to the presence of that Savior, whom he loved so fervently and in whom he trusted so implicitly—furnished a beautiful illustration of the power of christian faith to sustain the soul, when all other hopes fade and all other dependencies fail.

☞ Our billingsgate neighbor of the Gazette accuses us of quackery, because we publish Dr Ayre's advertisements Now this same editor knows the Pharmacopeia itself is not more free from the suspicions of quackery than his medicines. He knows they are endorsed by the medical Journals of this country, are used and prescribed by our best physicians, and have the commendations of professors and eminent men of character too exalted for his comprehension, and he knows too that they have done and are doing in this community an amount of good which the utmost stretch of his ability can never hope to equal.—*Berks Co. We wish to say to every person who reads this that there is an article known as Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver Remedy, which can be relied on as certain to cure liver complaint in any of its forms, such as Jaundice, Dyspepsia and numerous other complaints, described in another column, besides which it is one of the greatest preparations or cures for consumption, taken in early stages, that is now known. There is not in the world a better liver remedy or a cure for debilitated system than Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, for it has been fully tried in a large and extended practice till its results are fully known, and now it is offered as a tried emedy, and one that can be relied on.

AYER'S

CHERRY PECTORAL,

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

Colds, Coughs, and Hoarseness.

BRATTLEBORO, MASS. 20th Dec. 1855.

DR J. C. AYER: I do not hesitate to say the best remedy I have ever found for Coughs, Hoarseness, Influenza, and the consumptive symptoms of a Cold, is your CHERRY PECTORAL. Its constant use in my family and my family for the last ten years has shown it to possess superior qualities for the treatment of those complaints. ERRA S. KNIGHT, M. D.

A. B. MORTLEY, Esq., of Utica, N. Y., writes: "I used your Pectoral myself and in my family ever since it was invented it, and believe it the best medicine for the purposes ever sent out. With a bad cold I should not take twenty five dollars for a bottle than do without it, if it could not be had for any other money."

Croup, Whooping Cough, Influenza.

BROTHER AYER: I will cheerfully recommend your Cherry Pectoral as the best remedy we possess for the cure of Whooping Cough, Croup, and those diseases of children. Please send your fraternity in the South appreciate your skill, and commend your medicine to our people.
HIRAM CONKLIN, M. D.

AMOS LEE, Esq., Montreal, Ia., writes, 24 Jan. 1856: "I had a tedious Influenza, which confined me in bed six weeks; took many medicines without relief. finally tried your Cherry Pectoral, with the use of one bottle of which I was entirely cured. The first dose relieved the soreness in my throat and lungs, less than one half the bottle made me completely well. Your medicines are the cheapest as well as the best we can buy, and so extensively known, Doctor, and your praises as the poor man's friend."

Asthma or Phthisic, and Bronchitis

WEST MANCHESTER, Pa. Feb 4, 1856.

SIR: Your Cherry Pectoral is performing marvelous cures in this section. It has relieved several from the very worst symptoms of consumption, and is now curing a man who has labored under an affection of the lungs for the last forty years.
HENRY L. PARKS, Merchant.

A. A. RAMSEY, M. D., ALTON, MONROE Co., Ill., writes, Sept. 6, 1855: "During my practice of many years, I have found nothing equal to your Cherry Pectoral for giving ease and relief to consumptive patients, or even such as are curable."

We might add volumes of evidence, but the most convincing proof of the virtues of this remedy is found in its effects upon trial.

Consumption.

Probably no one remedy has ever been known which cured so many and such dangerous cases as this. Where no human aid can reach, but even to those the CHERRY PECTORAL affords relief and comfort.

ASTOR HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY, March 1, 1856.

DOCTOR AYER, LOWELL: I feel it a duty and a pleasure to inform you what your CHERRY PECTORAL has done for my wife. She had been for months laboring under the most dangerous symptoms of Consumption, from which we could procure gave her much relief. She was stead failing, until Dr. Strong, of this city, where we have resided for advice, recommended a trial of your medicine. It has blest his kindness; as we do your skill, for she has recovered from that day. She is not as strong as she was before, but is free from her cough, and calls herself well. Yours with gratitude and regard,
MELANCTHON SHELDEN, of SHELDEN & CO.

Consumptives, do not despair till you have tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It is made by one of the best medical chemists in the world, and its cures all around us prove the high merits of its virtues. — Philadelphia Ledger.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills

THE science of Chemistry and Medicine have long labored to produce this best, most effectual purgative which is known to man. Innumerable trials are shown that these PILLS have virtues which surpass in excellence the ordinary medicines, and that they win unprecedentedly upon the esteem of all men. They are sugar and pleasant to take, but powerful to cure. Their penetrating properties stimulate the vital activities of the body, remove the obstructions of its organs, purify the blood, and expel disease. They purge out the foul humors which breed and grow distemper, stimulate sluggish or disordered organs into their natural action, and impart healthful tone with strength to the whole system. Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of every body, but also formidable and dangerous diseases that have baffled the best of human skill. While they produce powerful effects, they are at the same time, in diminished doses, the safest and best physic that can be employed for children, being sugar coated, they are pleasant to take; and being purely vegetable, are free from any risk of harm. No pills have been made which surpass them in their power to control and transform by men of such exalted position and standing as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Many eminent clergymen and physicians have lent their names and certificates to the public the reliability of my remedies, and others have sent me the assurance of their conviction that my Preparations contribute immensely to the relief of afflicted, suffering fellow-men.

The Agent below named is pleased to furnish gratis my American Almanac, containing directions for their use, and certificates of their cures, of the following complaints:

Costiveness, Bilious Complaints, Rheumatism, Piles, Heartburn, Headache arising from a foul Stomach, Dysentery, Sea Indigestion, Morbid Inaction of the Bowels and Liver, Colic arising therefrom, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, all Scrofulous and Cutaneous Diseases which require an evacuation of Medicine, Scrofula or King's Evil. They also, by promoting the blood and stimulating the system, cure many complaints which it would not be supposed they could reach, such as Deafness, Partial Blindness, Neuralgia, Nervous Irritability, Derangements of the Liver and Kidneys, Gout, and other kindred complaints arising from a low state of the body or obstruction of its functions.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with some other pill they make more profit on. Ask for AYER'S PILLS, and take nothing else. No other they can say you compares with this in its healthful action or cures. Its powers. The sick want the best, and there is no reason and they should have it.

THE TECUMSEH NURSERY.

CHARLES STRONG, Proprietor.

The liberal encouragement heretofore extended to me, has enabled me from time to time to increase my stock of Nursery products, so that now I have not only one of the largest establishments in this State, but one which is excelled by none other in the quality of our plants. These considerations, together with the other steps now contemplated in prices, enable me to offer inducements, second to none, to those commencing the business, or buying to sell again. Every care is taken in the training and culture of my trees, while in the Nursery, to fit their properly for the hand of the Planter, regarding symmetry of proportion, and healthfulness of constitution as cardinal points I would recommend my distant patrons to make their purchases in the Autumn for Spring sales, as it is decidedly the best Season.

Our packing, for which a charge barely covering the expense is always made, is done in the most faithful manner, my aim being to make my packages proof against even the recklessness of Railroad employes—more than this I don't think I can safely promise Confirmatory of this assurance, it may be pardoned in me to mention that the excellence of my packing has been publicly noticed in many papers, and that I rarely hear of injury to my Trees on arriving at their destination, even though they may have been long on the way.

The prices for the quantities specified in the annexed List must be understood to be literal and invariable, the rate per thousand not being admissible for any number of hundreds less—and they are based on the positive condition that the selection of varieties shall be left to ourselves; pledging ourselves, however, that the choice of our correspondents shall be complied with as nearly as may be, and that our selections be composed of the best leading popular sorts, in due proportion, with more or less of the new popular kinds, according to our ability to supply them

To Correspondents

FIRST.—Write your Name, Place of Residence, County and State, so legibly that it cannot be mistaken Disappointments not attributable to us may otherwise ensue

SECOND.—Give particular directions as to the mode, route or line, by which you would have your packages conveyed, and to whose care you would have them consigned. For want instruction in these particulars, we shall forward them according to the best of our judgment; and we expressly desire it to be understood that all responsibility on our part, as to the goods, ceases on delivering them to the forwarders Tecumseh, and that to the forwarders alone purchasers must look for all losses by detention, injury or miscarriage

THIRD.—Inform us immediately of an error, omission or oversight, should any occur, when it shall be properly adjusted.

FOURTH.—The terms of payment are Cash, or a satisfactory note or acceptance, payable at Bank. Remittance by Check or Draft, should always be made payable to our order

$8,000 APPLES.—Standard trees; High and Stocky, best varieties selected by us, pr. thousand $120,00.

The Rural American.

THE best practical, agricultural and family paper in the United States, is the RURAL AMERICAN, published at Utica N Y It is issued on the 1st and 15th of each month at the very low price of 50 cents a year in clubs, and it is about the same size, and contains quite as much reading matter as the 82 agricultural weeklies of the day. The second volume commenced in January, and it is now circulated in all the States and Territories in the Union, and bids fair to outstrip, eventually, in circulation all similar papers. The great feature of its present success is the offering of a very valuable COLLECTION OF REMEDIES FOR THE CURE OF THE DISEASES OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS, at 50 cts FREE to all persons who get up a small club of four subscribers for six months, at 25 cts. each, and remit $1 therefor. The proprietor has been about ten years collecting the materials, at a great cost, for said work, comprising about 300 letters and receipts, from the most extensive stock breeders of of the U States and Europe, and it is worth ten times its price to any stock breeder in the country. All the diseases to which cattle horses sheep and swine are subject are embraced in the collection, and plain directions given to effect their cures Samples of the Rural American, containing the details of this liberal offer to its club agents, will be sent free to all applicants. Local agents are wanted in every town in the United States, and very liberal terms are offered to traveling agents in every State. Apply to the Editor

In the Meadow Mowing.

BY MAGGIE C. HIGBY

Away across the waving fields,
Where the light-winged birds are singing,
Where summer breezes stir the leaves,
A breath of fragrance bringing,
With many a faint and fluttering thought,
My foolish heart is going,
To where a handsome country lad
Is in the meadow mowing.

He's merry from the morn till night,
As any happy linnet;
His step along the garden walk
Has worlds of music in it;
His voice is like the silver brook,
That at my feet is flowing;
I fear the lad has got my heart
That's in the meadow mowing.

And if a crown were offered me,
And I were wise to bear it,
And twine it round with laurel leaves,
I wouldn't go and wear it.
I'd rathe breathe the country air,
And see th clov r growing,
And list the whistle of lad
That's in the meadow mowing.

Spring Wheat and Fall Plowing.

Wm. O. Houghtaling of Grand Rapids writes that he has two lots of spring wheat, grown under different systems of cultivation. The first was a very fine lot almost ready for the sickle on the fourth of August, and which was so rank and luxuriant, that the yeild seemed equal to the best field of winter grain. The field was plowed deeply last fall, and only cultivated the last spring previous to sowing the seed. The seed was sown on the 20th of April, and cultivated in with a light cultivator. The second lot was plowed during the spring immediately before sowing the seed; the soil being equally as good as that of the first. Both were old. Yet the yield on the second lot, either of grain or straw; does not seem to be half so good as that sown on the land plowed last fall. It is the opinion of Mr. H. that spring wheat grown upon land plowed in the fall, as he tried, yeilds a better and surer crop than winter wheat sown in October. We have no doubt at all of the correctness of the practice of fall plowing for spring crops, and especially spring wheat and barley. The exposure to atmospheric influences during the winter, mellows and enriches the seed bed to such a degree, that whenever the grain is sown it has the elements at hand ready for assimilation which it needs.

The soil newly turned up, has first to be prepared or mellowed, or oxidized as the chemists would term it before it becomes fit to yeild nourishment; and while the process is going on much precious time is lost, and the growth of the plant is abbreviated in proportion; its time for tillering cut short, and the yeild cannot be as large as when it has the whole length of the season which nature seems to have set apart as that in which the plant shall make stems and leaves, previous to the formation of the seed vessels.

From the Mich Farmer.

Plums and Experiments

When at Jackson a few days ago, we examined some plum trees in the garden of S. O. Knapp, Esq., which were laden with choice fruit to their utmost capacity to bear. These trees had only been set out four years, and were yeilding the richest returns for the labor bestowed upon them. The soil in which they stand is a gravelly loam, slightly tempered with clay.—Mr Knapp had found the sheet and mallet the most effectul preventive of the ravages of curculio. As soon as as the fruit had set, he spread sheets under the trees each morning, and with the aid of a mallett, in jarring the trees, he had fonnd no difficulty in securing most of the insects before they reached the fruit. He discontinued the practice some time before they disappeared, as he found the trees so heavily laden that a little thinning out of the fruit would be a benefit rather than a loss. Mr. Knapp had paved the ground under his trees with common boulders picked up on his own land. The circle of paving extended about four feet from the stem of each tree, and did not reach more than half way to the outside of the branches. The trees paved around were treated for the curculio the same as those which were not paved. It was observed while jarring the trees that the insects were much fewer on the portions of the trees that were paved than on the outside of them; and Mr. Knapp inclines to the opinion that a good hard surface which would afford no protection to the insects would be the most effectual remedy against this pest.

A neighbor of his had tried rolls of cotton wool wrapped round the trees as a preventive, and it was found effecutal, until the rains came and packed it so that the insect surmounted the obstacle. To protect the cotton chevaux de frieze, it is proposed next season to cover each roll of cotton with a strip of cotton batting, which will hang over the loose roll of wool and protect it from the rain.

Mr. Knapp has a number of plum trees located in different portions of his garden and all were laden with the choicest fruit, indicating that his treatment had been effectual.

R AYER'S Cathartic Pills,

(SUGAR COATED,)

ARE MADE TO

CLEANSE THE BLOOD AND CURE THE SICK

Invalids, Fathers, Mothers, Physicians, Philanthropists, read their Effects, and judge of their Virtues.

FOR THE CURE OF

Headache, Sick Headache, Foul Stomach,

Dyspepsia, Pa., May 1, 1856.

Dr. J. C. Ayer. Sir: I have been repeatedly cured of the worst headache that ever body was born by a dose or two of your Pills. It seems to seize from the stomach, which they cleanse at once. If they will cure others as they do me, the fact is worth knowing.

Yours with great respect, BD. W. PRELL,

Clerk of Steamer Clarion.

Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaints.

Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C., 7 Feb., 1856.

Sir: I have used your Pills in my general and hospital practice ever since you made them, and cannot hesitate to say they are the best cathartic we employ. Their regulating action on the liver is quick and decided, consequently they are an admirable remedy for derangements of that organ. Indeed, I have seldom found a case of bilious disease so obstinate that it did not readily yield to them.

Fraternally yours, ALONZO BALL, M. D.,

Physician of the Marine Hospital.

Dysentery, Relax, and Worms.

Post Office, Hartland, Liv. Co., Mich., Nov. 16, 1855.

Dr. Ayer: Your Pills are the perfection of medicine. They have done my wife more good than I can tell you. She had been sick and pining away for months. Went off to be doctored at great expense, but got no better. She then commenced taking your Pills, which soon cured her, by expelling large quantities of worms (dead) from her body. They afterwards cured her and our two children of bloody dysentery. One of our neighbors had it bad, and my wife cured him with two doses of your Pills, while others around us paid from five to twenty dollars doctors' bills, and lost much time, without being cured entirely even then. Such a medicine as yours, which is actually good and honest, will be prized here.

GEO. J. GRIFFIN, Postmaster.

Indigestion and Impurity of the Blood

From Rev. J. V. Himes, Pastor of Advent Church, Boston.

Dr. Ayer: I have used your Pills with extraordinary success in my family and among those I am called to visit in distress. To regulate the organs of digestion and purify the blood they are the very best remedy I have ever known, and I can confidently recommend them to my friends. Yours,

Warsaw, Wyoming Co., N. Y., Oct. 24, 1855.

Dear Sir: I am using your Cathartic Pills in my practice, and find them an excellent purgative to cleanse the system, and purify the fountains of the blood.

JOHN G. MEACHAM, M. D.

Erysipelas, Scrofula, King's Evil, Tetter, Tumors, and Salt Rheum.

From a Forwarding Merchant of St. Louis, Feb. 4, 1856.

Dr. Ayer: Your Pills are the paragon of all that is great in medicine. They have cured my little daughter of ulcerous sores upon her hands and feet that had proved incurable for years. Her mother has been long grievously afflicted with blotches and pimples on her skin and in her hair. After our child was cured, she also tried your Pills, and they have cured her. ASA MORGRIDGE.

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and Gout.

From the Rev. Dr. Hawker, of the Methodist Epis. Church.

Planet House, Savannah, Ga., Jan. 6, 1856.

Honored Sir: I should be ungrateful for the relief your skill has brought me if I did not report my case to you. A cold settled in my limbs and brought on excruciating neuralgic pains, which ended in chronic rheumatism. Notwithstanding I had the best of physicians, the disease grew worse and worse, until, by the advice of your excellent agent in Baltimore, Dr. Mackenzie, I tried your Pills. Their effects were slow, but sure. By persevering in the use of them I am now entirely well.

Senate Chamber, Baton Rouge, La., 5 Dec., 1855.

Dr. Ayer: I have been entirely cured by your Pills of Rheumatic Gout—a painful disease that had afflicted me for years. VINCENT BLIDELL.

For Dropsy, Plethora, or kindred Complaints, requiring an active purge, they are an excellent remedy.

For Costiveness or Constipation, and as a Dinner Pill, they are agreeable and effectual.

Fits, Suppression, Paralysis, Inflammation, and even Deafness, and Partial Blindness, have been cured by the alterative action of these Pills.

Most of the pills in market contain Mercury, which, although a valuable remedy in skilful hands, is dangerous in a public pill, from the dreadful consequences that frequently follow its incautious use. These contain no mercury or mineral substance whatever.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

and for the relief of consumptive patients in advanced stages of the disease.

We need not speak to the public of its virtues. Throughout every town, and almost every hamlet of the American States, its wonderful cures of pulmonary complaints have made it already known. Nay, few are the families in any civilized country on the continent without some personal experience of its effects; and fewer yet the communities any where which have not among them some living trophy of its victory over the subtle and dangerous diseases of the throat and lungs. While it is the most powerful antidote yet known to man for the formidable and dangerous diseases of the pulmonary organs, it is also the pleasantest and safest remedy that can be employed for infants and young persons. Parents should have it in store against the insidious enemy that steals upon them unprepared. We have abundant grounds to believe the Cherry Pectoral saves more lives by the consumptions it prevents than those it cures. Keep it by you, and cure your colds while they are curable, or neglect them until no human skill can master the inexorable canker that, fastened on the vitals, eats your life away. All know the dreadful fatality of lung disorders, and as they know too the virtues of this remedy, we need not do more than to assure them it is still made the best it can be. We spare no cost, no care, no toil to produce it the most perfect possible, and thus afford those who rely on it the best agent which our skill can furnish for their cure.

Patent Medicines.

A Medicine that Never Debilitates.

DR. SANFORD'S

INVIGORATOR,

OR LIVER REMEDY.

Has all the good qualities of a Purgative medicine, answering the purposes of any Cathartic without the debilitating effects experienced from mos. purgatives It acts slowly and gently, but surely, moving the bowels to carry off all the secreted matter, at the same time, stimulating the Liver to a proper performance of its functions.

The Invigorator cures the Sick Headache. Take one or two tea-spoonsful at each attack and it will soon disappear. For an overloaded stomache, or when food rises or soure, take the Invigorator after eating, and it will not prove disagreeable or oppressive. For Heartburn, Palpitation, or difficult breathing take a teaspoonful once or twice daily. For Loss of Appetite, Langu or Listlessness, the medicine is invaluable It will restore the appetite and make the food digest well.—Nightmare take a teaspoonful on retiring, and the demons of dream-land will all be fairies. After eating a heavy dinner, take a dose of Invigorator and it will relieve all oppression or fullness. The Invigorator is a Liver Remedy of unequalled virtue, acting directly on that organ, curing Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, Dysentery, Piles Worms, and all Female Obstructions, for which it has no equal.

We know there is nothing now before the American public, prepared with such skill by a scientific man, particularly for diseases of the Liver, as Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver Remedy. It has attained a reputation second to no other article in the world, simply because it rests on its own merit. To convince all by trial that it is all its proprietors claim it to be, if any of our readers are suffering from such diseases as are described in Dr. Sanford's advertisement, we know of no remedy that will so surely cure as the Invigorator.

There has lately been brought to our notice a medicine that seems to possess wonderful, curative and healing properties in diseases of the Liver, stomache and Digestive Organs. It came to us with so many testimonials in its favor that we have noted its effects in some of the worst cases of continual debility, caused by deranged liver, and in every instance the effect was to relieve or give a permanent cure, Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver remedy is what we refer to. We always have been credulous about cures by patent medicines, but we are convinced that this medicine, for family use, is not over rated by the host of recommendations it has. Our advice is, for all troubled with Indigestion, Debility or Bowel Complaint, to get a bottle and try it; our word for it, relief will be experienced.

Blessings To The Invalids who use Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, for it will relieve them of their pains as soon as it is taken into their stomach. Pain and misery cannot exist where the Invigorator is used, for it will as surely drive them away, as daylight will banish darkness, of this there can be no doubt to those who try it, for it carries conviction with every dose taken. Another evidence is the thousands of certificates from those who use it or have been cured by it.—Try one bottle, if it does not benefit, then we are mistaken

ANNUAL ADDRESS

Delivered at the Meeting of the Northern Lenawee Agricultural Society for 1857, by Prof A B. Palmer of the Michigan University.

It gives me pleasure to meet you on this occasion of your Annual Fair. To you it is an occasion of satisfaction and pride—of gratitude and of rejoicing An occasion of satisfaction and pride, in that you bring together for comparison and display, the excellent products of your own handiwork, the rich fruits of your own labor—of gratitude in that it is presumed you recognize in your hearts, and acknowledge by those acts, the bountiful beneficence of Him upon whom all depends—who has sent sun shine and showers, seed time and harvest to his laboring and hoping creatures—and it is an occasion of rejoicing, in that the severity of your toil is past, your crops are secured, and abundance is present in your barns and storehouses You celebrate here your "Harvest Home," and it is meet and becoming that you should rejoice.

I am here from the toils and fatigues of another field of labor to rejoice with you—and it is not, unbefitting that, as your former neighbor and your friend, I should Let us then my friends rejoice together—let us be grateful together for these bounties of the fruitful earth, our common mother and provider.

While here in the capacity of your speaker, I propose to occupy your attention, (if I may be so happy as to secure it amid all these other greater attractions,) by a brief consideration of your condition as inhabitants of the country, and tillers of the soil, compared with residents in cities engaged in other occupations and pursuits. I shall avoid anything like a disquisition upon the art and science of Agriculture; as you all may have access to works upon these subjects, and as these are the common themes in your Agricultural Journals and in the addresses delivered on occasions like the present indeed, with the details of your art, and with the scientific principles it involves, many of you are more familiar than I, though I claim to be a Farmer with you, you know, at least, as well as I, the importance of the rotation of crops—of their adaptation to the different varieties of soil, the time to plant and sow them—the treatment they should receive, and the time and mode of securing them It would be superfluous to exhort you to put the Sickle when the harvest is ripe—you know also the importance—the necessity, of preparing well the soil to receive the proper seed—of manuring judiciously, of plowing deeply and pulverizing thoroughly—you know how much better for your crops, how much more your gain for the capital invested and the labor expended, when your work is well and seasonably done. These things it is true, you may not all sufficiently appreciate or fully practice—you may be compelled by the insufficiency or the infirmation of means—by haste, or possibly by indifference and indolence to do your work in a superficial and slovenly manner. Farming is sometimes certainly most imperfectly done. Every one who travels often observes must see this. A most estimable and excellent gentleman, a citizen of this State and a practical farmer, told me a few days ago, that in traveling recently through New York and the New England States, though the land is there of much more value than with us, he saw continual evidences of poor farming There are occasional evidences of this, I fear, presented even among yourselves.

But I turn to a consideration of the topic already announced; the advantages of a rural residence and a farmer's life compared with a city residence, and other leading pursuits.

To the understanding of this subject, and for its discussion, my own observation and experience have in some degree qualified me I was born upon a farm—the son of a Farmer; and my childhood and youth were spent among scenes such as a farming country affords. Much of my earliest recollections are associated the farm house, and the garden, with its fruits and flowers—the farm yard and its occupants—the cackling hens with their eggs and chickens—the timid sheep and their little lambs—the lowing cattle with their butting calves—the fleet and the mysterious young colts—the waddling geese and the yellow goslings—the speckled pigs and the grunting sow. With these same recollections of the green pastures bedecked with daisies and buttercups, the growing corn marshalled in long rows, its tall stalks and broad leaves furnishing shade and inviting childish seclusion; where the humming bees could be heard in the depths of the pumpkin blossoms, and where the world except its distant sounds and the upper sky, was all shut out.

> "The Orchard, the meadow, the deep tangled wild wood,
> The bridge and the rock where the cataract fell,
> The wide spreading pond and the mill that stood by it
> And e'en the rude bucket which hung in the well,"

these, with the birds and the fishes, the squirrels and the rabbits—and all the simple objects of rural nature mingle themselves with my childhood dreams.

With a somewhat later period the implements of husbandry and the labors of the field are linked The driving of oxen, the riding of horses to cultivate the corn, the plow, the hoe, the rake, the pitchfork, and as I still grew up, the axe, the scythe, and the cradle, and their vigorous application, all dwell with the memories of my youth.

And there too, far back in my childhood thoughts and feelings, and mingling with the recollections of later youth, is the country School house and its varied scenes. The Village Church and its more sacred churchyard are in the retrospects not forgotten.

After leaving this childhood home in pursuit of knowledge at more distant Schools, on each returning vacation I was again upon the hilly old farm, assisting in its operations, developing there the muscles, spreading the frame, and accumulating a store of vital vigor, to serve as a foundation for future physical and mental toil.

At a later period when I had completed my pupilage and entered upon the duties of my profession, I found myself in this then newer, but natively beautiful spot, amidst these village and country scenes, mingling freely with many of yourselves.

From years of observation, I know much of your mode of life, your habits, your pursuits, your embarassments, your struggles, your successes, your thoughts, feelings, fears, hopes, sorrows and your joys I have joined in many of your circles around the cheerful fire. I have surrounded with you the same genial board. I have hastened to many of you in your calamities and your distress I have watched over your beds of sickness; I have often (with my own hands) bathed your burning brows; I have endeavored to administer to your relief and avert the dangers which threatened you and your beloved ones; with what faithfulness and success you must judge—you appeared to return to me a degree of confidence which was ever cheering to my heart. But these things have gone by yet not all forgotten and lost. In the great book of the past the record is made, and the results of all acts, great or small, are ever in the progress of development.

I was intimating my acquaintance with country life, and with your country life. My identity with you was for twelve active years. For that time I was fanned by the same breezes, faced the same storms, drenched by the same rains, was jolted over the same crossways and was spattered by the same mud. I was dependent upon the same sun-shine and showers, the same seed time and harvests, for my subsistence. In the earlier times I breathed with you the same malaria, shook with the same ague, writhed under the same fever, and swallowed the same Quinine In short, I lived, enjoyed, and suffered among you, and as a community I know you well.

I have now sojourned and lived in other places. I have made the acquaintance of life in several large cities I have mingled somewhat with what is called the world I have come in contact with men of various characters and pursuits. I have known their habits, their thoughts and feelings; I have witnessed their successes and their disappointments; I have seen some suddenly grow rich and as suddenly become poor; I have seen others rise upon the wave of popular favour, and sink again beneath the surge of popular clamor; I have seen great hopes revived and depressed, kindled and extinguished; I have witnessed lives under the highest tension of intensely wearing business, and under the fullest relaxation of slothful, rusting inactivity; I have been in the princely palaces of the rich, and the miserable hovels and garrets of the poor—have seen the confident pretensions of the self righteous and the proud, and the self-abasement of the unhappy and the lowly; I have seen both the riotous and repentant victims of unrestrained passions, and the true men of firm unyielding principle; I have seen the truly good, and the really bad mingled together in all stations, come of each, in palaces and in hovels

I have occasionally been present in the assemblies of Savans; I have listened to their wisdom, and drunk in their eloquence; I have had some opportunities of knowing their more private thoughts, feelings, and aspirations—their hopes and fears—their ambitions and disappointments,—and now after these various observations and experiences which I will not specify further, after thus surveying the world, sometimes poking it in the ribs and looking inquiringly into its eye. I come back here to talk to you farmers, of your own quiet life, and shall be most happy if I can show you reasons for being contented with your lot, if I can convince you that you have all the essential means of rational enjoyment—that your lives are not, or need not be thrown away, or your light of usefulness hid under a bushel. I shall be most happy if I can convince the young men among you who may have a feverish desire to live in a city, or to change their occupation; to engage in mercantile or professional pursuits—that they may lead lives of honor, peace, usefulness, distinction and happiness, by intelligently continuing in the occupation of their fathers—that indeed, (for this is the fact,) they stand vastly better chances to develop fully, their physical powers and gratify their material wants, to secure health and competency, that they stand better chances as farmers to develop and cultivate their intellect—to form correct tastes, and above all to preserve that purity of heart, that integrity of purpose, and that righteousness of life, upon which all enjoyment worthy of the name must forever depend than in any other situation or occupation in life. I shall be gratified, if I can set in motion a train of thought which shall show the young ladies, that nothing which essentially belongs to female culture, refinement, taste and happiness, depends upon a large display in a fashionable metropolis upon the formal calls, the gaudy parties, and the empty frivolities of a city life

The shortness of time, and the extent of our theme requires the utmost condensation, and in its pursuit, the briefest suggestions can alone be indulged. I shall not ask your attention long

In considering the influences of locality pursuits, and modes of life upon man, we must regard him as possessed of Physical, Intellectual and Moral natures—these different departments of his being united and mutually influenceing each other, so united that impressions upon one, materially effect the rest. A proper appreciation of the subject requires that this be borne in mind.

Of the general comparative influence of a city and country residence, of out-door labour and in-door occupations upon the Physical system, upon health and the continuance of life, there can be no doubt. The vital statistics of all countries wherever they have been kept, place this matter beyond all question I need but refer to the bills of mortality of any city, compared with those of any neighboring rural region. There is scarcely a large city where the infant mortality especially, is not enormous, where the chances of a child's death are not absolutely frightful to an affectionate parent, and how frequently those that survive the perils of childhood, are feeble and degenerate both in body and mind Of the special causes of this state of things I do not propose to speak. It is sufficient for our present purpose to call attention to the facts, and terrific facts they are to those in cities who appreciate their truth

I have frequently heard it remarked by the most eminent medical men and closest observers in the city of New York, that were it not for the constant importation of fresh supplies from the country, enterprise, energy, business, health, and life itself would become extinct in that great metropolis. Of the truth of the observation, there can be no doubt.

The influence of bodily health and vigor upon solid, persistent, mental power, is a matter too plain to require illustration and too trite to justify extended remark. There are always exceptional cases to general rules, and there is a species of precocious brilliancy of mind sometimes found in connexion with feeble, sickly and distorted bodies; and these facts may seem to contradict the general truth. But follow that sickly precocious child to adult age, if by possibility it live so long, and early mental decay will assert the truth of the ancient saying, that a sound mind is to be expected only in a sound body; and if our researches extend to the next generation, to the child of the physically degenerate parent, the truth will be too apparent for a lingering doubt. Here exceptions to the rule will scarcely be found

It may be asserted, that although a city residence tends to the enfeebling of the body and consequently of the mind, yet that there are many intellectual appliances and mental stimulants arousing and urging forward the mind in cities, which do not exist in the country; and this may be, indeed it is true to a certain extent, and in relation to some departments of mental activity. Larger numbers of highly intelligent people may sometimes be found together in the city than in the country, and the advantages of intelligent conversation, the power of association, and the influence of mind upon mind, are not to be denied. The effects of eloquent, popular lectures, orations and sermons more frequently, perhaps, met with in cities, are adduced as among the superior intellectual advantages of these localities; and so far as these do more abound in the cities, they too must have their weight—But I give it as my deliberate opinion, that all these alleged advantages are much more than counter-balanced by the influence of mentally dissipating associations and attractions upon the mass of minds. Indeed but few enjoy these intelligent conversations, and these eloquent lectures and sermons, while all are subjected to the influences which dissipate the mind. While the few then, are mentally improved by more private associations and public entertainments, the many are deteriorated by their associations, and by the public entertainments they attend.

Everybody knows the country is the place most favorable for calm and original thought, and for the enjoyment of books and studies. Possibly in some secluded street, works of merit have been composed, but in the bustle of what city has any great work of genius been produced?

When did the brick walls, and narrow streets, and hard pavements of a city bring inspiration to a poets soul? Tho' some great poets have sojourned for a time in cities, they have been with scarcely an exception born and reared in the country; and in its free, pure air, their spirits have always soared higher, and expanded more largely. Mountains and rivers, rocks and trees, birds and flowers, and the various objects of nature, at the same time inspire the poet, and furnish him with themes.

But man is a moral as well as a physical and intellectual being, and the moral is the highest department of his nature In regard to the comparative influence of city and country upon this department, I scarcely need do more than appeal to general observation, and echo the general sentiment. Cities have ever been regarded as moral plague spots upon the face of society. It is not pretended that virtue may not, or does not exist in cities, even in the highest degree known among men Even Sodom had one righteous man; and Joseph lived in the city of Pharaoh, and the household of Potiphar. Yet all history, and all experience, illustrate the corrupting influence of cities, especially upon the young.

Intemperance, rowdyism, dissipation in all their forms are much more likely to overtake the youth in the city than in the country, and unbending integrity, unaffected simplicity, and moral purity, are much more likely to be found in the retirement of rural life, amidst the beauties and the purity of Nature. The bad particularly assemble in cities; and opportunities to vice are afforded, and temptations are multiplied as numbers increase. Infinite Wisdom has taught us to say "Lead us not into temptation."

But notwithstanding all these considerations, the truth of which none will deny there is on the part of many a restless desire, often morbid, to plunge into the excitement of city life, leaving the safer, the purer, though the more quiet occupations of the country and the farm. Let me say to you, young men, if any with these feelings are present, you do not understand what you seek. You may feel strong in your talents and your virtues, but both might fail you in the trials you would encounter.

But without reference to city or country, there are some who regard the occupation of the farmer, if not degrading, as at least irksome and dull; and who covet a mercantile or professional life—Now, is this, to the extent in which it prevails, a wise and proper feeling?

It cannot be denied that severe and continued toil, whether in the work-shop the counting-room, the store, or the farm, is unfavorable to intellectual and aesthetical development. If proper muscular relaxation be not indulged, and the mind be not simultaneously cultivated in its higher powers, and exercised with various knowledge, there is more or less tendency to mental degradation; against continual drudging toil; while neglecting mental culture and mental exercise, allow me to warn you. Avoid it almost as you would sloth, or mental or physical dissipation. Though the highest authority has declared that man "shall eat bread by the sweat of his face" and "that if he will not work, neither shall he eat" Yet it is nowhere said that this sweat shall perpetually pour anymore than it is said that he shall continually eat. Labor like every other appointment of Providence, is a blessing, a blessing essential to happiness it becomes a curse when it is abused.—Let me repeat, that even during working hours, muscular labor must be alternated with muscular repose; and in order to keep the proper balance of the powers, the mind must be cultivated and exercised There is always time, or should be time for this. The introduction of machinery increases this time. Though more severe labor is sometimes necessary during portions of the summer, it need not be too constant during this season; some hours each day should be devoted to reading; and the long winters, and odd times, if properly improved, will afford opportunity for much—indeed for very great mental improvement, without the neglect of any duty. When I speak of the high advantages and great dignity of a farmer's life, I mean an intelligent farmer; one who reads, and thinks, and cultivates his mind, one whose whole faculties are in harmony. Such a man is always respected, is always honored. If a occupation is honored, no mans more so. Such an intelligent and cultivated farmer is welcome in any circle, but the circle of fools, and there he does not wish to enter.

A great man has said, that he who causes two blades of grass to grow where but one grew before, is a public benefactor. As the farmer creates food and wealth, produces from the soil that which all must have, all others are peculiarly dependent upon him for support, and he is the most independent of all. As his hand moves, the world goes on, should it cease the world must stop. Is not he honored who possesses power which is properly exercised? and has not the farmer power? Is not he honored who has dependents? and are not all dependent upon him? His is indeed the primitive occupation Adam before the fall was placed in the garden to till and keep it. The ancient worthies Abel and all the Patriarchs, Moses and Gideon, David and Elisha, tilled the soil or fed their flocks. This occupation has honored, or rather, it has shed honor upon the greatest secular and more modern men. Cincinnatus and Washington followed the plow Most of the heroes of our Revolution, dropped the implements of husbandry to grasp the sword of freedom and victory. From whatever point of view we look upon the farmers profession whatever testimony upon the subject we receive, we find it both honorable and honored. Let then the idea of degradation as connected with this pursuit, be forever banished and forgotten.

Neither can it be dull or irksome, if pursued in the proper manner and spirit It cannot be dull, for in studying it philosophically, and watching the results of its progresses, there is everything to interest the intelligent mind. Some of the most profound and intricate problems in chemistry and natural history are involved in the production of the simplest crop, and in the operation of the most ordinary processes. This remark might be abundantly illustrated, but time will not allow.

The labor of farming when not excessive, can only be irksome to the lazy, and laziness is a quality to be despised and resisted. It is unworthy to be plead. But you wish to be merchant. Let us for a moment look at this useful and necessary occupation, and see if it is so much to be coveted. In the first place the merchant is bound down to an unwholesome, indoor occupation, and oppressed with anxiety, uncertainty and care. His mind is constantly upon the stretch, but in a particular direction. He neither enjoys the freedom of air or soul that the farmer is blessed with His papers are becoming due, his credit is in danger, his creditors are imperious, and his debtors are not prompt, or perhaps have failed, With a thousand sources of loss, he must be constantly anxious. And then, how very few attain the objects of their pursuits, wealth and honor How large a portion fail of success, are reduced to poverty and ever loaded with perpetual debts, followed moreover by the execrations of those they have involved in their own ruin. I refrain to speak of the wear and tear of conscience which is likely to occur in these operations. Reflect well then my young friends, before you determine to be merchants. Count the danger and the cost

The late General Dearborn, who was Collector of the Port in Boston for forty years, and had taken pains during the whole time to keep an exact record of the names and fortunes of the commercial community, declared that of all the merchants in that prosperous city, who were in business when he entered into office, there were only three that had not failed, while many of them had failed twice, and even thrice, within the period.

But you are inclined to a profession.—Well a worthy ambition perhaps; but what profession would you choose? The ministry? If the Divine Master has called and annointed you, and requires you to labor in that field, hide not your talent in a napkin, go, without purse and without scrip, but look not for your reward in this world; first, because it is not right that you should, and secondly, if you do, you will in all humane probability be disappointed.

Do you choose the law? Well, there are a great many at that business already, more I am told than can honestly live by it Why, nearly all the lawyers among us, are turning farmers! But what kind of a lawyer will you be? Will you become one of those great men who rise towering above thier fellows, astonishing Judges and juries with their learning and eloquence, winning great fame and receiving fat fees? Or will you be one of those little pettifoggers, hanging about the purlieus of courts, and picking up the odd scraps, and the crumbs that fall from other lawyers tables? Or if you expect to range along in some undefined position between these extremes, which do you fancy will approximate? These are pertinent questions, and worthy of being settled in your own mind before you determine to go into this profession. It makes all the difference in the world what place you care to occupy in it. If judicious, intelligent and reliable men, who know you well, think you will make a great lawyer, and your consciousness, confirms their judgment, if a steady fire of ambition is glowing within you, if you feel strong in your integrity, and yet rely humbly for support upon a power not your own, if you are thus guarded from being led astray by any of the crooked practices which are regarded by many out of that profession, as being sometimes incident to it, if you are willing to familiarize yourselves with the dark side of human nature, to take part in the wranglings of the bitterest of human passions, if you feel assured that your manhood will enable you to rise above all the influences of your nature, if you have that strength and that grace, which enables you to feel all this;—then would I not discourage you. But let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall" Go forth, be a great lawyer and a good man. Labor for the promotion of peace and the establishment of right. But if you have a lurking suspicion that you will gravitate down towards the other end of the scale, either intellectually or morally, risk not your body and soul in the enterprise. "You'd better be a dog and bay the moon, than such a Roman. Certainly, you'd better be the humblest farmer than such a lawyer.

But perhaps you will choose the profession of Medicine. On this subject I could say much, but I shall say but little It is a noble profession rightly understood and rightly practiced So indeed is the Law. All necessary occupation are honorable and good. The Law has for its true object, the protection of human rights, the establishment of justice.

Medicine has for its subject of investigation the study of man, his natural condition, his thousand morbid states, and the innumerable agents which may affect him. It has for its object of accomplishment, the promotion of health, the relief of suffering, the removal of disease, and the prolongation of life. Its mission is to do good. And now if you feel yourselves called and anointed to this work, take it upon you. If entered upon, in the right spirit, and with the right motives, you cannot be quacks, a character if possible more to be despised than even that of the lone unprincipled lawyer; the Quack tampers as with more sacred interests, than the petifogger. But remember, the duties of the Physician to be properly performed require peculiar qualifications and special devotion. They require a mortal heroism which braves all danger, endures all fatigue, and suffers all privations.

Extensive knowledge, great labor, incessant care, are essentials: and as compared with other branches of business, you are, as in the kindred profession of the ministry, not to expect in this world, and especially pecuniarily, a reward commensurate with the labour, the labor, the anxiety, the danger and the responsibility required.

The grateful consciousness of doing good would be your chief reward. The grateful affection of the relieved your greatest wealth.

I have not particularly spoken of the Mechanic Arts. They are closely allied to Agriculture, and may be considered as appendages to it. Both are classed together under the head of productive industry, and the remarks applied to one will almost equally apply to the other, at least as these arts are practised in rural regions. A residence in a village does not materially differ from a residence upon a farm.

Mechanical occupations are almost equally necessarry, and are equally honorable with Agricultural. For many purposes I should make no distinction. Your display here would be incomplete without the products of these Arts, and without them practical Agriculture would not be successful

In looking over the whole Subject as I have endeavored most impartially to do, let me counsel you to make farming what it should be, and be contented therewith.

It may not excite the same hopes of sudden wealth as trade and commerce, but it is infinitely more sure to secure to those who follow it, a permanent competency, a true Independence. It may not afford as much prospect of indulgence in fashionable display and luxurious refinement; but it is much more likely to secure the possession of the higher virtues, and that true refinement of character and soul which brings real happiness, and it should not prevent proper refinement of manners. It may not furnish as attractive a field for the pursuit of ambition, as are furnished by what are called the learned professions But the great object of ambition is little else than a phantom, a shadow. At least it is but a bubble, and breaks in the hand that grasps it.

The reputation which years of labour and rectitude have won, may be marred by a single neglect or error, or be tarnished by the foul breath of Slander. He who wins surely must expect to meet with rivals. He may excite jealousy and envy, and it is not to be computed what jealousy and envy will do. Their resources are boundless. It is true that pertaining to our temporal condition, nothing is permanent and secure. "Riches, may take to themselves wings and fly away." Health may be supplanted by disease. Mental power may be succeeded by weakness.—A good name, so much better than precious ointment, may fall under the hand of the moral assassin. Every earthly treasure moths or rust may corrupt, or thieves break through and steal. All, all is uncertain. But that earthly state which is most likely to be secure, is the lot of the frugal, the industrious, the intelligent and the virtuous farmer. His crops may be destroyed, but they are the crops of our season—his land remains. Seed time and harvest will come again. Sickness may overtake him—though with prudence he escapes far more than other men, and is more certain to recover health. He seldom excites the jealousy of others, and therefore escapes envy freed from many temptations, machinations and corrupting influences to which others are subject, his moral dangers are less. His children, the tender pledges of his love, and the dearest objects of his hopes, are vastly more likely than other men's children to live, and grow up in virtue around him; to cheer his manhood and bless his declining years, and at last, he of all men, is most likely to go gently down in a ripe old age, at peace with the world, his conscience and his God, to an honored grave, watered by the tears of grateful sorrow, and of filial love.

It had entered into my design for the purpose of showing the facilities in a rural life for the study of natural history, and for thus improving the mind and taste and furnishing the enjoyment of the luxury of knowledge to paint out some of those interesting objects with which you constantly have to do, and to the study of which your invention and occupations would naturally lead: and I can hardly refrain from spending a few minutes before closing these remarks in alluding to some points of interest connected with the vegetable kingdom, and urging upon you the pleasing character, the refining tendency, and the real utility of the study and cultivation of plants and flowers.

I might speak to you of the distinctions between inorganic matter and organized growing bodies. Of the mysterious principle of vegetable life, its certain origin, and the various laws of its action. I might attempt to express some specific ideas of the philosophy of germination, and the multiplication of plants, of how they grow, how they take up the inorganic earth and adopting it into their own substance, elaborating by a wonderful chemistry, these crude matters into various forms, suited to the nourishment, and ober wants of animals and of man. I might point out the effects which vegetation has upon the general state of the earth and the air, modifying all the conditions of climate. I might speak of the unusual distribution of plants, the adaption of the various species to every degree of heat and cold, of light and darkness, of moisture and dryness, of solid rocks or of mellow soil.

But passing over all these, allow me to bring to your attention, as a useful and useful subject of thought and study, the modes by which plants become so generally distributed.

However deep the adventurous pioneer may penetrate into the forest, when he has destroyed the trees, cleared away the underbrush, let in the sunlight, and stirred up the soil, a crop of vegetation springs up which had not appeared there before. This remarkable fact has puzzled many an observer, and suggested the doctrine of spontaneous generation, or the production of plants without germs from previous plants, by the agency of some force inherent in the soil itself. This is opposed to all analogy and all we know of vegetable production, and cannot be admitted for a moment. But whence do these germs come? How do they spring up so suddenly, and to such an extent? One of the alleged characteristics of plants as distinguished from animals is that they are fixed to the soil. "Are destitute of the power of locomotion. This is true to a larger extent of individual plants when the process of growing has once commenced, but of the race or species, it is not true. Even individual plants often travel slowly, sending out subterranean stems which shoot up, and in the course of years spread over large regions. The Canada Thistle is an example.

But the seeds of plants are not limited to such slow coach proceedings. They are extensive travelers, often possessing special organs for journeying.

Some make only short journeys, or annual stages. They are sometimes put up like small bombshells into little mortars, and when ripe, are fired off by curious contrivances. The seed springs up where it alights, and the next year shoots off other seeds, thus forming increasing circles.

Some seeds are scattered abroad by means of springs in their capsules bent back, until a breath of wind, a falling leaf, or an alighting insect, causes a rebound.

The Elaterium or Squirting Cucumber has within it, for the same purpose, a complete miniature fire engine, doubtless as ingeniously contrived as many in the patent office.

Other seed vessels, as you well know, have ingenious contrivances, by which they press into their service every passer by coming within their reach, and thus secure a passage they know not whither, but run their chance for some congenial spot. Examples of these are to be found in the bearded grains and vaburrs, rious which have littlehooks, that they curiously insert into the hair of grazing cattle, the wool of browsing sheep, and the trowers of truant boys.

Still other seeds which do not care to obtain services by such insinuating modes, succeed by other forms of pretended friendship, sticking by an adhesive glue to their chosen companions. Bees and other insects, thus carry far on their swift wings the little seeds, which when dropped upon the earth slowly sink beneath the surface, and patiently bide their time for successful germination. This may never come. In the deep and uncongenial forest it may sleep forever, or the woodman may come with his axe and open up that forest, and it springs into life.

Again, there are other seeds, which from their form, size and weight, cannot avail themselves of these means to catch a ride, and would be obliged to die at the parent plant, did not the fowls of the air, tempted by the succulent mass which surrounds them, carry them in their beaks or their crops to a new and far distant home. The Jay or the Robin which picks up the cherries, the grapes, or the wild berries, may carry them in its rapid flights far, far away, and after eating and digesting the soft pulpy part, drops the hard stone or seed case with its contained germ — This may grow up a tree, under which the beasts of the field have shadow, "and the fowls of heaven lay dwell in the boughs thereof."

But again, there are other seeds more independent and self-reliant, which scorn a resort to all these contrivances for "spreading themselves," by the aid of others, and launch out upon long journeys on their own account. Some, like the seeds of the maple, have genuine little wings on which they literally fly away. Others, like the dandelion and thistle, have light downy appendages, or feathery tufts and crowns, by which they rise in the air, and floating aloft, are carried by its currents, we know not whither, but certainly on long summer and autumnal wanderings.

The seeds of the "fire-weed," as it is sometimes called, or Erigeron, the first to show its luxurious growth where forest trees are cleared away, have appendages of this kind attached to them, which account for the ready prescence of this plant in such situations.

There are still other seeds, possessed of the same independence, but which have not wings to fly, that take to the water, and "paddle their own canoe" down rivers, and over oceans, to distant shores. Thus are new islands, upheaved in the midst of the ocean by subterranean forces, or built up atom by atom by corals, covered with vegetable life and beauty, and made fit habitations for bird and beast and man.

I have mentioned these few facts in relation to the distribution and spread of plants their study, and general facts of this kind are by no means the most interesting to those initiated in this science. To the Scientific Botanist, every leaf and flower, every form and color, has a beauty and an interest not easily expressed.

The refining, purifying influence of the study and cultivation of plants and flowers, is an additional reason for attention to such pursuits. Indeed the study of all natural objects is calculated to interest, to purify, and to develop the mind, to afford constant pleasure, mental improvement and practical utility. Constant pleasure, because these objects are continually presenting them with to show the interest which is attached to all their curiosities and beauties; constant improvement, because they are ever manifesting new beauties and perfections, for no which were not before observed, relations which were not before traced, laws which were not before recognized, plans which were not to be understood, and the mind is thus led out, it cannot be otherwise, from the certain design to a designer, purifying and expanding as it proceeds, until it grasps for, and reaches that Great Source of all being and all improvement, and this knowledge of nature is of, constant practical utility also, because it may be incessantly applied to the daily necessities and business of life But there is something peculiarly refining in attention to ornamental plants and flowers.

A garden was the most fitting place for man's residence, and the most fitting object for his care, in his primitive innocency. In this most beautiful portion of the earthly creation, where the eyes of "Adam the goodliest men of men since born," and of "the fairest of her daughters, Eve," were addressed by all that was most beautiful, their senses steeped in fragrance such as shrubs, and fruits and flowers alone can yield; there was doubtless everything that could delight and purify, and elevate, and nothing, until the serpent came, that could annoy, corrupt, or degrade.

And since the fall, we have evidence in the great book of truth, as well as from observation, of the purifying influence of flowers.

When of old the Lord was about to communicate with one of his Prophets, the command was, "Go into a field of flowers where no house is built, and there I will come and talk with thee," — and what place more fitting for a Divine communication than under the open arch of the Shining Heavens, and with the Stars of earth around.

In the figurative language of the Mosiac account, it is said, "The Lord God walked in the garden in the cool of the day," and where would the Divine presence be more likely to be manifested? Indeed we might say with the poet.

"If we could open and unbind our eyes,
"We all like Moses should see
"Even now where the Radiance lies."

And He who was greater than all Historians, Lawgivers, Prophets, and Poets, said, Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin, yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."

The wealthy and refined often send far away to distant lands for specimens of the beautiful, in art, to decorate their dwellings, and improve their taste: and in this they are wise, for a proper development of the sense of the beautiful, is a source not only of pleasure, but of purity and virtue. Still art with all her boasted skill, can only imitate at a distance the perfections of nature. In the flowers of the field, we have objects of beauty which far surpass the proudest productions of art. The great poet of Nature says: "To gild refined gold, to paint the lily, or to add another hue unto the rainbow, or with taper light to seek the beauteous eye of Heaven to garnish, is wasteful and ridiculous excess."

In conclusion let me repeat, that you have all the necessary means for personal and social improvement, and for rational enjoyment at your command. Your duty and your interest requires that you should make your characters, your houses, and your occupations, what they should be, and be contented with your lot. Why indeed, should you not be content? The means of education and knowledge are already most liberally provided. Michigan is actually taking the lead in these public provisions. The District School, the Union School, and the University, with all their appliances, their means of illustration, and their Libraries are within your reach. The whole wealth of Science and literature is spread out before you. Aside from these public provisions, books and periodicals of every kind are cheap and accessible.

Knowledge is much more to be desired than precious things, need scarcely to be sought for. It is brought to your doors and urged upon your acceptance. Avail yourselves of all these means, be educated, be intelligent, be virtuous, be useful, and you cannot fail of happiness and honor.

There are thousands entangled in the busy turmoil of city life, who long for the health, the freedom, the quiet and the independence, which you enjoy, who turning from the emptiness, the follies and the corruptions of artificial life would exclaim with the author of the "Ode to Independence," who had similar contrasts in view, when he said:

"Those sculptured halls my foot shall never tread,
Where varnished Vice and Vanity combined,
To dazzle and seduce their banners spread;
And forge vile Shackles for the free-born mind.
Where insolence his wrinkled front uprears,
And all the flowers of spurious fancy blow;
And Folly his ill woven chaplet wears,
Full often wreathed around the miscreants brow;
Where ever-dimpling falsehood pert and vain,
Presents her cup of stale profession's froth,
And pale Hypocrisy, with all his bloated train
Torments the sons of Glutton and Slothby
Nature I'll court in her sequestered haunts,
By mountain, meadow, streamlet, grove, or cell,
Where the poised lark his evening ditty chants,
And health, and peace and contemplation dwells.
There early shall with solitude recline;
And friendship pledge me to his fellow-swain;
And toil and temperance sedately twine
The slender cord that fluttering life sustains;
And fearless competence shall guard the door,
And taste, unspoiled at the frugal table spread;
And industry supply the humble store;
And sleep, unbribed his dews refreshing shed.
While mantled innocence, etherial sprite,
Shall chase far off the goblins of the night;
And Independence* o'er the day preside,
Propitious power! my patron and my pride.

* Such Independence of fashions and opinions and favours, of whims and patronage as the Farmer alone enjoys.

Godey's Lady's Book.

The October No. of Godey is received. It is the commencement of a new series, being the fifty-fifth volume, in which Godey has commenced and promises to continue still further improvements and the readers of Godey know, that whatever he promises he always performs. The embellishments, patterns &c are not excelled by any Magazine of the kind, and the literary contributors to its columns are persons of established merit. Address L. A. Godey Phila.—Published monthly—Terms $3 per annum, 2 copies $5 3 copies $6.

The Lady's Home Magazine,

The October No., of Authurs Home Magazine is upon our table. Its 'Colored Fashions' for October is a beatiful specimen of the kind, and its literary articles are always creditable. It is somewhat in kind, but less in size with Godey.—Address T. S. Authur & Co. Phila.—Terms $2 per annum—4 copies $5,00.

Cosmopolitan Art Journal.

Free to all its members.

It is with pleasure we call the attention of our reader to the Cosmopolitan Art Journal Three dollars will secure any magazine you wish and entitle you to membership 1 year, or if you wish, the Journal, a $3 steel engraving and a membership for 1 year. Who would ask more? Address C. L. Derby, 548 Broadway.

☞ The new "Deseret Alphabet" for the Mormons is completed, and some pica type has been cast in St. Louis. Specimens of the type are published, but they are unproducable in types that common people use. The type founders have supplied the Mormons with apparatus for re-casting their old metal. So the Deseret News will probaly hereafter be a sealed letter, litdrally, to Gentile eyes.

"Go in Lemons and get Squeezed."—The Lafayette Courier relates the following "incident," which occurred at the depot in that city: A gentleman and lady inspired with a sudden recognition, were observed to rush frantically into each other's arms; and the fun of it was, that, after a hearty embrace, they discovered that both "had the advantage." They were strangers, but the lady, mistaking him for her "dear cousin Charley," embraced him, while he, who had never seen her before, went in lemons and "got squeezed." Their mutual embarrassment upon the discovery of the mistake can well be imagined.

Fall Fashions for Gentlemen.—By the last steamer we have advices from Paris on this important subject, which we hasten to lay before our readers, premising that no marked enange has taken place. Gentlemen will continue to wear—

Chapeau hatte a la bonnette; stocka and cravatte of silke and satine; collaare of Linne, starcha and stiffe; coats a la swallo Tale and Skirts, whiz Butt Tun a la 'Old Grimes," all down before; veste of rich stuffe, double breasted, a la Shanghae; Shirts with speckele papiere bosom and studdee; Pan To Loon a la de Ville, trim'd viz Stripe a la Pri Zon! Shoo wid Buckeele, hose stripe; and boots a la calf skin, a la Kippe, a la Pat Ent Leithare, a la Mo Rook oh, a la Horse Hyde, a la tings. Mouchier a la poly ett e louse.—Gloves a la Ratle!

An Elegy.

Ah! sleep on my fair one, for cold is thy breast,
Go winds round a requiem there,
Ye billows, I charge ye, disturb not her rest,
Disturb not the rest of my fair.—

I'll hasten to the woodland, I'll fly to the bower
Where spring's sweetest odors are shed,
From thence cull the fairest and loveliest flower,
To bloom o'er the flower that is dead.

With care will I plant it above her cold tomb,
Along by the soft sighing billow,
And the zephyr of morning shall play with the bloom
Of the rose on her sea-beaten pillow.

But as summer steals on with its bright scorching ray,
This flower of such beautiful hue,
Shall wither away, in lingering decay,
And fall from the place where it grew.

Yet still from the ashes enclosed in this tomb,
Shall a flower more lovely arise,
Divine in its form, and eternal its bloom,
Its garden the field of the skies.—

Then sleep on my fair one, for cold is thy breast,
Go winds, round a requiem there,
Ye billows, I charge ye disturb not her rest
Disturb not the rest of my fair.— W.

A Lady Freemason.

The Hon. Elizabeth St. Ledger was the only female ever initiated into the ancient mystery of freemasonry. How she obtained this honor we shall lay before our readers. Lord Doneraile, Miss St. Ledger's father, a very zealous mason, held a warrant and occasionally opened lodge at Doneraile House, his sons and some intimate friends assisting; and it is said that never were the masonic duties more ridigly performed than by them. Previous to the initiation of a gentleman to the first steps of masonry, Miss St, Ledger who was a young girl, happened to be in an apartment adjoining the room generally used as as lodge room This room at the time was undergoing some alteration; amongst other things the wall was considerably reduced in one part. The young lady having heard the voices of the freemasons, and prompted by the curiosity natural to all to see this mystery, so long and so secretly locked up from public view, had the courage to pick a brick from the wall with her scissors, and witnessed the ceremony through the first two steps. Curiosity satisfied, fear at once took possession of her mind. There was no mode of escape except through the very room where the concluding part of the second step was still being solemnized and that being at the far end, and the room a very large one she had resoultion sufficient to attempt her escape that way and with light but trembling steps glided along unobserved, laid her hand on the handle of the door, and gently opening it, before her stood a grim looking tyler, with a crawn sword. A shriek that pierced through the apartment alarmed the members of the lodge, who, all rushing to the door, and finding that Miss St. Ledger had been in the room during the ceremony in the first paraxyom of their rage, her death was resolved on; but from the moving suplication of her younger brother, her life was spared on the condition of her going through the whole of the solemn ceremony she had unlawfully witnessed. This she consented to, and they conducted the beautiful and terrified young lady through those trial which are sometimes more than enough for masculine resolution little thinking they were taking into the bosom of their craft a member that would afterwards reflect a lustre on the annals of masonry.—The lady was cousin to General Anthony St. Ledger, governor of St. Lucia, who instituted the interesting race and the celebrated Doncaster St. Ledger stakes. Whenever a benefit was given at the theatres in Dublin or Cork for the Masonic Female Orphan Asylum, she walked at the head of the freemasons, with her apron and other insigna of freemasonry, and sat in the front row of the stage box. The house was always crowded on those occasions. Her portrait is the lodge room of almost every lodge in Ireland. —English Paper.

A Roundabout Route.

A business letter, containing a remittance of $1,000, was mailed on the 10th day of July, at Troy, N. Y., intended for a house in Saline, Mich. This letter brought up at Salem, because the direction was erroneously made to Salem N. Y.—From Salem, N. Y., it went to Salina, N Y., thence to Salem, N. J., from whence it returned, with the following inscription

"Don't belong to Salem, N. J."

Then follows, "Mis-sent and paid," then "Mis-sent again," "Try Michigan," "Don't belong here," &c. It at last went to Salem, Mich., and thence to its real destination. The best of the joke is, that the gentleman transmitting the account of these blunders, dates his letter Oct. 1. 1857.

It is claimed that Rhea county, Ala., is "out of debt, out of crime, and out of whiskey and the last Circuit Court had not a case on the docket."

An Editorial Convention

While the press generally throughout the State are discussing the propriety of a State Editorial Convention, and the place where it shall be held, we notice that some are disposed to say with regard to the whole matter, "cui bono?"

Now it occurs to us that much good may, and indeed almost necessarily must result, from the holding of such a Convention as the one proposed. Although the Editorial fraternity have never been charged with a want of dogmatism, it is nevertheless true, that in the higher sense of the term, they do not as a general thing sufficiently respect the true character and dignity of their calling. The more immediate and direct tendency of frequent association of those engaged in a similar employment or profession is to increase their proper understanding and due appreciation of its value and character.

Another result also, which cannot fail, to a certain extent, to arise from a Convention of this kind, is to awaken a kindred kindness and sympathy between and to liberalize the views and sentiments of the fraternity at large. It has always been a matter of regret, and even of reproach, that so many of the corps editorial, have been found willing to employ the press, which belongs rather to the public, than to themselves, as a vehicle of personal, or even partizan vituperation and abuse.—The public at large, are in general very little interested in the private quarrels of Editors, as of other men, and the less they hear about them the better they are pleased, and the more they are prepared to respect the emanations of the press.

It is undoubtedly true that men must be found to differ in opinion, and that when they do so, they have a perfect right to express that difference in editorial columns as otherwhere, but self respect, and a due regard for popular sentiment would dictate that this should be done like gentlemen, with dignity and courtesy, rather than like vagrants in billingsgate. No one will we, think, deny, that the character of the press has heretofore suffered severely from a too common indiscretion of this kind, and yet we believe the press of Michigan will compare favorably with that of any other State in the Union in this respect.

There can be little doubt however, that a personal and fraternal association of the gentlemen in its control, will still more incline them to that kindly forbearance and gentlemauly courtesy in their future differences, which will add still further to one already enviable reputation for a liberal urbanity.

The present too is a favorable time for the cultivation of those friendly relations. There is no partizan campaign upon the tapis or in immediate prospect, which would be likely to interfere with, or mar, the higher objects and purposes of its convocation.

With the Publishers too, there is much to be accomplised by a more perfect system and uniform equalization in the conduct of this department of the press. It will be understood then that we are, and why, we are in favor of the proposed Convention, and as to the place, we believe Jackson to be, perhaps, the most acceptable of any one point to the State at large, out of Detroit, while the time we think should be deferred until after the completion of the Jackson Branch, which will put it in easy connection by Rail Road with the entire Southern Michigan.

Northern Lenawee Fair.—Our Association Township Fair of the last week was all that its friends had any right to anticipate for it.

The day was beautiful, the attendance large, and the show of stock and articles for exhibition, even superior to that of the last year, which has always been considered a remarkable success.

Of the address by Prof. Palmer it is unnecessary to speak, as it appears upon the outside of this issue, and speaks for itself. It is suffleient evidence of an appreciation of its value by those who heard it, that its publication was earnestly desired by the friends of the Society.

With regard to a show of fruit only, was the time of the fair in-opportune. Owing to the almost unexampled lateness of the present season, the fruits odinarily presented for exhibition had not yet sufficiently matured to make a fair show.

Lenawee County Agricultural Fair.—Our readers will not forget that our County Fair occurs on Wednesday and Thursday, the 7th and 8th of Oct. A full attendance, and exhibition is confidently anticipated. Andrew Howell Esq. of Adrian is Secretary. The Executive Committee meets previous to that time, but the time we are not able to state.

Cincinnatti, Sept. 14.

The Citizens Bank of Smead, Collord & Hughes suspended this morning. They have issued a circular stating the cause to be the illness of the senior partner, and the present crisis in money affairs.

Washington, Sept. 14.

The long established banking house of Messrs. Prairo & Nourse, suspended payment to-day, owing to a difficulty in raising money on their securities. They have made an assignment, and it is represented that their assets will largely exceed their liabilities.

New Orleans, Sept. 12.

Mexican mail arse received. The troubles between the civil and ecclesiastical powers still exist. Further insults have been offered to the American Consul at Mazatlan, arising from the seizure of the Ameriran schooner Ada, and insulting the officers and crew.

Washington, Sept. 14.

Col. Benton's physicians pronounce him better this morning, and entertain hopes of his recovery.

Providence, Sept. 14.

The difficulty in the Bank of South County is only temporary. There can be no doubt of its ability to meet its engagements.

Philadelphai, Sept. 14.

The Scott Legion, accompanied by Gen. Patterson and ex-Gov. Geary started for New York at ten o'clock this morning.

Washington, Sept. 12.

The modification made in the overland routes, at the instance of the Hon. Jno. S Pheloss, but which requires the assent of the contractors, are as follows:

The route starting from St. Louis to pass no further west than Springfield, Mo., thence by Fayetteville, Van Buren, and Ft. Smith, Arkansas, to Preston, Texas, intersecting at that point the route from Memphis, via Little Rock, Preston and Ft. Fillmore to San Francisco.

New York, Sept. 14.

Mr. Andrew Jackson jr., has declined to bestow the gold snuff box upon Major Dykeman, on account of the division of sentiment and excited feelings existing here on the subject. He says that whenever the public judgment of the people of New York shall settle the claim between the individuals, it shall be his pleasure to discharge the duty resting upon him.—He returns immediately to Tennessee.

Mrs. Cunningham's trial is assigned for the 28th inst.

The anniversary of the American Army entering into the city of Mexico, was celebrated this afternoon by a parade of the 78th Regiment of National Guards, and the reception and entertainment by the New York Volunteers of the Scott legion of Philadelphia. The great expected feature of the day, however, did not come off as appears above.

Utica, Sept. 14.

The Supreme Court has appointed W. A. Wetmore, receiver of the Ontario Bank of this city.

New Haven, Sept. 14.

A spirited town election came off here to-day, for the choice of Assessors and Board of Relief. The opposition elected the ticket by about 200 majority.

Press Convention of Michigan.

A State Convention of the Editors and Publishers of this State will be held at Jackson, Thursday, October 8th, At 2 o'clock, P. M.

For the purpose of establishing rules regulating the business, and for the transaction of such other business as may come before the Convention. Come one, come all.

☞The State Fair meets at Detroit Sept. 29, 30, and Oct. 1st and 2d. We are indebted to the Secretary for a membership ticket for the occasion and shall attend if possible.

☞Rev. N. Stacy (Universalist) will preach at Union Hall next Sabbath at 1 o'clock P. M.

☞We are indebted to A. K. Waldron Esq for some very fine rare-ripe Peaches, which were we think superior to anything we have seen this season. He will have a large quantity for sale

FOUND.

On Thursday morning Sept. 10th opposite the residence of Mrs. Boughton in the village of Tecumseh, a Black silk dress The owner can have the same, by calling at the store of B. J. Bidwell, proving property, and paying for this notice.

☞It will be seen by reference to our advertising columns, that Emmerson & Stocking have received their new supply of marble. FRED says it is the best assortment both in quantity and quality, ever brought to this market. Those wishing a nice ornament for the grave, will find there, a choice lot to cull from

☞We were shown a beautiful sett of teeth, a new style, called "Rim Work" which is far superior to anything of the kind we have ever seen. The advantage of the rim is to keep the food from getting between the plate and gums, it also holds the teeth with much more firmness upon the plate. It was the construction of S. A. Baldwin of this place. Rim Work will eventually be the style. Those wishing a good job will do well to give him a call

☞We were shown samples of a new style of Pocket Book, which was invented by D. C. Smith of this place, who is the Patentee. This book will destroy the pick-pocket business. It is so constructed as to fasten at the option of the owner, to any portion of his pockets, and cannot be removed without warning the owner. This valuable book will command the attention of the public at large and will find a ready sale. It has long been needed by travelers who have valuable papers to carry.—We understand, Mr. Smith has a contract with the manufacturers, and will soon be able to supply the demand.—Money is hard to get, but if once in D. C. Smith's pocket book, we venture to say, nothing but a good debt can get it out. The quality of the books are excellent, and the price not above the price of common Pocket Books.

☞Dr. Barr, of the firm of Barr & Pelham, has again returned, and will be found at their old office, Apothecaries Hall, up stairs, where he will be ready to wait upon all who may favor him with a call.

☞We noticed the return of some "Circus Gamblers," at our township fair, who set up their games, but were quickly invited to "hold on," by Mr. Hyde, a gent they respected very much the rest of the day

☞Mr. Strong has promised us a Hardware advertisement. It will be the first we ever had, and we don't exactly know yet how it will look.

Keep your eye on the cook stove.

☞Mr. Bennett, the Sheriff, was here yesterday. We understand he was looking for somebody, and finally found him Rogues look out for Bennett, and don't commit any crime within his reach, for he has a sharp eye and will catch you, "sure."

☞A man named Wilson was found dead in Niles last Monday night. Cause, whisky.

RYAN TURNED UP AGAIN.—The last number of the Paw Paw Free Press contains a letter from the immortal RYAN, a letter characteristic of the man, and is so full of 'important information for the people,' that we cannot forbear giving it a place in our columns. It contains a warning to Jack Frost to keep his distance:

'FARMERS, last June I told you to be of good cheer, 'soaking rains would force things ahead.' The weather this fall will be all your hearts could wish, for—corn is safe—green crops can stand out late. Farmers can plough in November. According to the signs there will be 16 additional days of summer weather thrown into the fall.

My theory is one of the most sublime that ever entered the head or heart of any man or thing not dreamed of by the most learned men."

Paw Paw, Sept. 6, 1857. W. W. RYAN.

1857 THE TECUMSEH NURSERY.

CHARLES STRONG, Proprietor.

The liberal encouragement heretofore extended to me, has enabled me from time to time to increase my stock of Nursery products, so that now I have not only one of the largest establishments in this State, but one which is excelled by none other in the quality of our plants. These considerations, together with that other other one, moderation in prices, enable us to offer inducements, second to none, to those commencing the business, or buying to sell again. Every care is taken in the training and culture of my trees, while in the Nursery, to fit them properly for the hand of the Planter, regarding symmetry of proportion, and healthfulness of constitution as indispensable. I would recommend my distant patrons to make their purchases in the Autumn for Spring sales, as it is decidedly the best Season.

Our packing, for which a charge barely covering the expense is always made, is done in the most faithful manner, my aim being to make my packages proof against even the recklessness of Railroad employes—more than this I don't think I can safely promise. Confirmatory of this assurance, it may be pardoned in me to mention that the excellence of my packing has been publicly noticed in many papers, and that I rarely hear of injury to my Trees on arriving at their destination, even though they may have been long on the way.

The prices for the quantities specified in the annexed List must be understood to be literal and invariable, the rate per thousand not being admissable for any number of hundreds less—and they are based on the positive condition that the selections of varieties shall be left to ourselves; pledging ourselves, however, that the choice of our correspondents shall be complied with as nearly as may be, and that our selections be composed of the best leading popular sorts, in due proportion, with more or less of the new popular kinds, according to our ability to supply them.

To Correspondents.

FIRST.—Write your Name, Place of Residence, County and State, so legibly that it cannot be mistaken. Disappointments not attributable to us may otherwise ensue.

SECOND.—Give particular directions as to the mode, route or line, by which you would have your packages conveyed, and to whose care you would have them consigned. For want instruction in these particulars, we shall forward them according to the best of our judgment; and we expressly desire it to be understood that all responsibility on our part, as to the goods, ceases on delivering them to the forwarders Tecumseh, and that to the forwarders alone purchasers must look for all losses by detention, injury, or miscarriage.

THIRD.—Inform us immediately of an error, omission or oversight, should any occur, when it shall be properly adjusted.

FOURTH.—Our terms of payment are Cash, or a satisfactory note or acceptance, payable at Bank. Remittance by Check or Draft, should always be made payable to our order

80,000 APPLES.—Standard trees; High and Stocky, best varieties selected by us, pr. thousand $120,00.

10,000 PEARS.—Vigorous 2 years old, Standard and Dwarfs pr. hundred $25,00 to $30,00

80,000 PEACHES.—Per thousand $80,00
" " hundred $10,00

10,000 CHERRIES.—Per hundred $18,00 to $25,00

The Rural American.

THE best practical, agricultural and family paper in the United States, is the RURAL AMERICAN, published at Utica N. Y. It is issued on the 1st and 15th of each month at the very low price of 50 cents a year in clubs; and it is about the same size, and contains quite as much reading matter as the $2 agricultural weeklies of the day. The second voltmn commenced in January, and it is now circulated in all the States and Territories in the Union, and bids fair to outstrip, eventually, in circulation all similar papers. The great feature of its present success is the offering of a very valuable COLLECTION OF REMEDIES FOR THE CURE OF THE DISEASES OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS, at 50 cts. each to all persons who get up a small club of four subscribers for six months, at 25 cts. each, and remit $1 therefor. The proprietor has been about ten years collecting the materials, at a great cost, for said work, comprising about 300 letters and receipts, from the most extensive stock breaders of of the U States and Europe, and it is worth ten times its price to any stock breeder in the country. All the diseases to which cattle, horses sheep and swine are subject are embraced in the collection, and plain directions given to effect their cures. Samples of the Rural American, containing the details of this liberal offer to its club agents, will be sent free to all applicants. Local agents are wanted in every town in the United States, and very liberal terms are offered to traveling agents in every State. Apply to the Editor

A Retired Physician, 75 years of age having lost his Father, two Brothers, Daughter, Son-in-law, Nephews and Nieces, by that dreadful disease, CONSUMPTION, and suffering with a Cough himself, determined to visit the East Indies, Egypt and Japan, where he discovered a Preventive and Certain Cure for Colds, Coughs, Bronchitis, CONSUMPTION, Nervous Debility and Asthma. His cough was cured immediately; he returned, cured his Relatives, who inherited the disease, and in connection with his son have employed it in their prestige, curing thousands of cases considered hopeless by others. For the purpose of rescuing as many of his suffering fellow beings as possible he is sending the Recipe to all who wish it for 10 cents; 3 for it to pay the postage, and the balance printing. and shall be receiving from week to week, through the Season, any Goods that may be wanted, from the Eastern Manufacturers, and Jobbers of

and Other Cities in the East.

I have tried during Nineteen Years of my life the various modes of doing business.

Firstly for Cash.
Secondly on Short Credit.
Thirdly, had to take Long Credit, Offsets and Accounts.

Lastly, I have been compelled to wait for payment of Goods sold on Six Months time, long enough for a man to visit California, get rich, and return, before payment could be forced or coaxed.

Now I wish to say, to my numerous friends and patrons, that I am thoroughly convinced that the mode of buying goods on time is both injurious to the buyer and seller.

I will hereafter Sell for Ready pay, at such prices that will defy all competion in this Town, State, or the United States.

No one should buy a dollars worth of Goods without calling at the

Great Western Cash Store,

and get the prices. Some are so unfortunate as to be compelled to trade at long credit stores—to those I would say, Call and See what you can save by having the Ready or something as good, to use where you please.

Early Rising.

"GOD bless the man who first invented sleep!"
So Sancha Panza said, and so say I;
And bless him also that he didn't keep
It a great discovery to himself, or try
To make it as the lucky fellow might—
A close monopoly by "patent right!"

Yes—bless the man who first invented sleep,
(I really can't avoid the iteration;)
But blast the man with curses loud and deep,
Whate'er the rascals' name, or age, or age location,
Who first invented, and went round advising,
That artificial cut-of—Early Rising!

"Rise with the lark and with the lark to bed,"
Observes some solemn sentimential owl.
Maxims like these are very cheaply said;
But, ere you make yourself a fool or fowl,
Pray just enquire about their rise—and fall.
And whether larks have any beds at all!

The "time for honest folks to be abed"
Is in the morning, if I reason right;
And he who cannot keep his precious head
Upon his pillow till its fairly light,
And so enjoy his forty morning wink,
Is up—to knavery; or else—he drinks!

Thompson, who sung about the "Seasons" said,
It was a glorious thing to rise in season;
Butchen he said it—lying—in his bed
At 10 o'clock A. M.—the very reason
His preaching wasn't sanction'd by his practice
He wrote so charmingly. The simple fact is

'Tis doubtless well to be sometimes awake—
Awake to duty, and awake to truth—
But when alas, a nice review we take
Of our best deeds and days, we find in sooth,
The hours that leave the slightest cause to weep
Are these we pass in childhood, ou asleep!

'Tis beautiful to leave the world awhile
For the soft visions of the gentle night;
And free at last from mortal care or guile,
To live as only in the angels sight,
In sleep's sweet realm so cosily shut in
Where, at the worst, we only DREAM of sin!

So, let us sleep and give the Maker praise;
I like the lad who, when his father thought
To clip his morning nap by hackneyed phrase
Of vagrant worm by early songster caught,
Cried 'saved him right' it's not at all surprising
The worm was punished, sir, for early rising

From the Branch County Republican

Wool Growing.

MR. EDITOR:—It is a matter of much importance to us producers, that we raise that kind of grain, and that kind of stock that will bring us the greatest amount of money for the labor bestowed and the produce consumed.

As I design to say a few things on wool growing, and as wool has become one of the staples of Michigan, it is of the utmost importance that we have correct notions on this subject, and practice accordingly. I assume the position that all animals of like kind consume food according to the weight of the carcase. Consequently it is for our interest as wool growers, that we propagate and keep that kind of sheep that will produce the greatest amount of wool and of the best quality, according to the amount of food consumed. And now Mr; Editor, I claim that the Spanish Merino, is that kind of sheep. It is a well known fact that the Spanish are a small, well deve oped, hardy, docile race of sheep Their wool is fine, thick long, and oily consequently heavy. It always brings first price in market. As we are so far from any reliable meat market, we shall say but little on the subject of raising sheep for the butchers.

But we ask, who can afford to keep a sheep that will weigh 120lbs., live weight, which will clip 5lbs., of coarse wool, and then sell him to the butchers for 20 shillings? When two Spanish sheep, weighing 60lbs. each, will clip 10lbs. of fine wool, which may be kept on the same produce. The figures stand thus:

	Cr.
By one coarse sheep the butcher,—	$2,50
By 5lb. wool worth 35cts,	1.75
Sheep and wool worth,	4,25
By two Spanish sheep,	$5,00
By 10lbs. wool at 45cts.,	4,50
Sheep and wool worth,	9,50

These figures show a balance of over one half in favor of the Spanish, to say nothing of the difference in the increase, which is no small item in the matter.

It is not our business as producers to make the consumer rich but to take care of ourselves. I believe that the farmer who keeps a flock of coarse natives, looses at least one half of his produce consumed by them.

Again we say it is the priviledge as well as the duty of every farmer to keep that knid of stock that will produce him in the greatest amount of money from the produce consumed.

Peaches.

PEACH PRESERVES.—Peaches if preserved whole, should be gathered before they are fully ripe; pare and cook tender in little water. If in quarters crack the pits of half of the peaches and add to them. Let the syrup simmer down quite thick before adding it to the fruit, and when cold, cover, tight and keep free from heat and moisture.

PICKLED PEACHES.—Take any kind of fine, large peaches that are not to ripe, wipe off the down with a soft flannel cloth, place 3 or 4 cloves in each, and lay them whole in a jar.—To every gallon of vinegar add one quart of water, five pounds of sugar, tablespoonful of salt and whole cinnamon. Pour it over the fruit boiling hot, being careful that the vinegar covers them well, and let them stand in a cool place a week or ten days; then turn off the liquor and boil as before; after which they are ready to be set away in the store room for future use.

PEACH JELLY may be made in the usual way. When very ripe, mash and strain through a jelly bag or seive Allow a pound of loaf sugar to a pint of juice, half-ounce of bitter almonds blanched and pounded, or half of the kernels of the stone. If it does not form readily add isinglass.

PEACH MARMALADE.—Mash to a fine pulp and add sugar in proportion to the sweet meats, and simmer down it shoud be a smooth thick mass. Put away in large tumblers.

PEACHES IN BRANDY.—Wipe, weigh and carefully select the firmest fruit; have ready a qaurter of their weight in powdered loaf sugar, put the fruit in a vessel that closes tightly, throw the sugar over and cover with brandy Place a piece of double foolscap under the cover, place the jar in a saucepan of water until the water is quiet hot; but not boiling; when cold, tie the cover down tightly so that no air can penetrate.

PEACH WINE.—Take nearly ripe fruit, stone it and bruise it to a pulp, put eight pounds of the pulp to one quart of water and let stand 24 hours; then strain out the juice, and to every gallon add 2 lbs. of sugar.—Turn into a cask and when fermented and become perfectly clear, cork tightly in bottles.

PEACH PIE.—Mellow juicy peaches peeled, whole, or in quarters, laid in a deep pie plate—on each layer of peaches sprinkle a thick layer of sugar a tablespoonfull of water, and a light sprinkling of flour, and it will need no other seasoning. Cover with a thick crust and bake an hour.

PEACH DUMPLINGS.—Should be steamed instead of stewed, as that would break them. Serve with common sauce, or lemon sauce, of one lemon cut fine, one cup of butter, and large cup of sugar.

PEACHES FOR TEA.—Pare ripe peaches, cut them in quarters, sprinkle them with layers of sugar, and them stand an hour to extract juice. Then cover them with rich cream, and there is no thing better.

PEACHES A LA STRAWBERRY.—Ripe peaches cut in small pieces, with soft mild eating apples in proportion of 3 peaches to 1 apple, mixed with sugar, and left to stand 2 or 3 hours, make excellent mock strawberries.

SUBSTITUTES FOR COFFEE.—Several articles have been proposed as substitutes for coffee. Rye was formerly much used but it is a bad substitute, and can never be made of sufficient strength to satisfy coffee drinkers in general. Acorns dried and roasted make stronger beverage but they have an objectionable taste, and an astringent quality which might be injurious to some constitutions, although this drink has been recommended for medicinal purposes. The common sweet potatoe cut up into small pieces dried and roasted makes an excellent imitation and if mixed in equal portions with real coffee the mixture can scarcely be detected. But the best substitute of all is chesnut. Let the nuts be dried in the shells break up the kernels into small pieces about the size of coffee grains, and roast them in the usual manner.

A Medicine that Never Debilitates.

DR. SANFORD'S
INVIGORATOR,
OR LIVER REMEDY.

HAS ALL THE GOOD QUALITIES OF A Purgative medicine, answering the purposes of any Cathartic without the debilitating effects experienced from most purgatives It acts slowly and gently, but surely, moving the bowels to carry off all the secreted matter, at the same time, stimulating the Liver to a proper performance of its functions

The Invigorator cures the Sick Headache: Take one or two tea-spoonsful at each attack and it will soon disappear. For an overloaded stomache, or when food rises or sours; take the Invigorator after eating, and it will not prove disagreable or oppressive. For Heartburn, Palpitation, or difficult breathing take a teaspoonful once or twice daily. For Loss of Appetite, Langu or Listlessness, the medicine is invaluable It will restore the appetite and make the food digest well—Nightmare take a teaspoonful on retiring, and the demons of dream-land will all be fairies After eatings a heavy dinner, take a dose of Invigorator and it will relieve all oppression or fullness. The Invigorator is a Liver Remedy of unequalled virtue, acting directly on that organ, curing Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, Dysentery, Piles Worms, and all Female Obstructions, for which it has no equal.

We know there is nothing now before the American public, prepared with such skill by a scientific man, particularly for diseases of the Liver, as Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver Remedy It has attained a reputation second to no other article in the world, simply because it rests on its own merit To convince all by trial that it is all its proprietors claim it to be, if any of our readers are suffering from such diseases as are described in Dr Sanford's advertisement, we know of no remedy that will so surely cure as the Invigorator.

There has lately been brought to our notice a medicine that seems to possess wonderful, curative and healing proprieties in diseases of the Liver, stomache and Digestive Organs. It came to us with so many testimonials in its favor that we have noted its effects in some of the worst cases of continual debility, caused by deranged liver, and in every instance the effect was to restore or give a permanent cure. Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver remedy is what we refer to. We always have been credulous about cures by patent medicines, but we are convinced that this medicine, for family use, is not overrated by the host of recommendations it has. Our advice is, for all troubled with Indigestion, Debility or Bowel Complaint, to get a bottle and try it; our word for it, relief will be experienced.

BLESSING To The Invalids who use Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, for it will relieve them of their pains as soon as it is taken into their stomach. Pain and misery cannot exist where the Invigorator is used, for it will as surely drive them away, as daylight will banish darkness, of this there can be no doubt to those who try it, for it carries conviction with every dose taken. Another evidence is the thousands of certificates from those who use it or have been cured by it.—Try one bottle, if it does not benefit, then we are mistaken.

ARE MADE TO
CLEANSE THE BLOOD AND CURE THE SICK.
Invalids, Fathers, Mothers, Physicians, Philanthropists, read their Effects, and judge of their Virtues.
FOR THE CURE OF
Headache, Sick Headache, Foul Stomach,

PITTSBURGH, Pa., May 1, 1851.

DR. J. C. AYER: Sir: I have been especially cured of the worst headache my body can have by a dose or two of your Pills. It seems to arise from a foul stomach, which they cleanse at once. If they will cure others as they do me, the fact is worth knowing.

Yours with great respect, ED. W. FREBLE,
Clerk of Steamer Clarion.

Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaints.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 16th, 1856.

SIR: I have used your Pills in my general and hospital practice ever since you made them, and cannot hesitate to say they are the best cathartic we employ. Their searching action on the liver is quick and decided, and especially they are an admirable remedy for derangements of the organ. Indeed, I have seldom found a case of bilious disease so obstinate that it did not readily yield to them.

Fraternally yours, ALONZO BALL, M. D.,
Physician of the Marine Hospital.

Dysentery, Relax, and Worms.

FORT OTTER, HAMPTON, LIV. CO., MICH., Nov. 24, 1856.

DR. AYER: Your Pills are the perfection of medicine. They have done my wife more good than I can tell you. She had been sick and pining away for months. Was off to be doctored at great expense, but got no better. She then commenced taking your Pills, which soon cured her by expelling large quantities of worms (dead) from the body. They afterwards cured her and our two children of bloody dysentery. One of our neighbors had it bad and my wife cured him with two doses of your Pills, which others around us paid from five to twenty dollars doctor bills, and lost much time, without being cured entirely even then. Such a medicine as yours, which is actually good and honest, will be prized here.

GEO. J. GRIFFIN, Postmaster.

Indigestion and Imparity of the Blood.

From Rev. J. V. Himes, Pastor of Advent Church, Boston.

DR. AYER: I have used your Pills with extraordinary success in my family and among those I am called to visit in distress. To regulate the organs of digestion and purify the blood they are the very best remedy I have ever known, and I can confidently recommend them to my friends. Yours, J. V. HIMES.

WARSAW, WYOMING CO., N. Y., Oct. 24, 1856.

DEAR SIR: I am using your Cathartic Pills in my practice, and find them an excellent purgative to cleanse the system, and purify the foun ins of the blood.

JOHN G. MEACHAM, M. D.

Erysipelas, Scrofula, King's Evil, Tetter, Tumors, and Salt Rheum.

From a Forwarding Merchant of St. Louis, Feb. 4, 1856.

DR. AYER: Your Pills are the paragon of all that is great in medicine. They have cured my little daughter of ulcerous sores upon her head and feet that had proved incurable for years. Her mother has been long grievously afflicted with blotches and pimples on her skin and in her hair. After our child was cured, she also tried your Pills, and they have cured her. ASA MORGRIDGE.

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and Gout.

From the Rev. Dr. Hawkes, of the Methodist Epis. Church.

PULASKI HOUSE, SAVANNAH, GA., Jan. 6, 1856.

HONORED SIR: I should be ungrateful for the relief your Pills have brought me if I did not report my case to you. A cold settled in my limbs and brought on excruciating neuralgic pains, which ended in the severest form of rheumatism. The disease grew worse and worse, until, by the advice of your excellent agent in Baltimore, Dr. Mackenzie, I tried your Pills. Their effects were slow, but sure. By persevering in the use of them I am now entirely well.

SENATE CHAMBER, BATON ROUGE, La., 5 Dec., 1855.

DR. AYER: I have been entirely cured by your Pills of Rheumatic Gout—a painful disease that had afflicted me for years. VINCENT SLIDELL.

For Dropsy, Plethora, or Kindred Complaints, requiring an active purge, they are an excellent remedy.

For Costiveness or Constipation, and as a Dinner Pill, they are agreeable and effectual.

Fits, Suppression, Paralysis, Inflammation, and even Deafness, and Partial Blindness, have been cured by the alterative action of these Pills.

Most of the pills in market contain Mercury, which, although a valuable remedy in skilful hands, is dangerous in a public pill from the great consequences that frequently follow its incautious use. These contain no mercury or mineral substance whatever.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL
FOR THE RAPID CURE OF
COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, INFLUENZA, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION,
and for the relief of consumptive patients in advanced stages of the disease.

We need not speak to the public of its virtues. Throughout every town, and almost every hamlet in the American States, its wonderful cures of pulmonary complaints have made it already known. Nay, few are the families in any civilized country on this continent without some personal experience of its effects; and fewer yet the communities any where which have not among them some living trophy of its victory over the subtle and dangerous diseases of the throat and lungs. While it is the most powerful antidote yet known to man for the formidable and dangerous diseases of the pulmonary organs, it is also the pleasantest and safest remedy that can be employed for infants and young persons. Parents should have it in store against the insidious enemy that steals upon them unprepared. We have abundant grounds to believe the CHERRY PECTORAL saves more lives by its use in consumptions it prevents than those it cures. Keep it by you, and cure your colds while they are curable, lest neglect them until no human skill can master the inexorable canker that, fastened on the vitals, eats your life away. All know the dreadful fatality of lung disorders, and when they know too the virtues of this remedy, we need not say more than to assure them it is still made the best it can be. We spare no cost, no care, no toil to produce it the most perfect possible, and thus afford those who rely on it the best agent which our skill can furnish for their cure.

THE TECUMSEH NURSERY.

CHARLES TRONG, Proprietor.

The liberal encouragement heretofore extended to me, has enabled me from time to time to increase my stock of Nursery products, so that now I have not only one of the largest establishments in this State, but one which is excelled by none other in the quality of our plants. These considerations, together with that other other one, moderation in prices, enable us to offer inducements, second to none, to those commencing the business, or buying to sell again. Every care is taken in the training and culture of my trees, while in the Nursery, to fit them properly for the hand of the Planter, regarding symmetry of proportion, and healthfulness of constitution as cardinal points. I would recommend my distant patrons to make their purchases in the Autumn for Spring sales, as it is decidedly the best Season.

Our packing, for which a charge barely covering the expense is always made, is done in the most faithful manner, my aim being to make my packages proof against even the recklessness of Railroad employees—more than this I don't think I can safely promise. Contradictory of this assurance, it may be pardoned in me to mention that the excellence of my packing has been publicly noticed in many papers, and that I rarely hear of injury to my Trees go arriving at their destination, even though they may have been long on the way.

The prices for the quantities specified in the annexed List must be understood to be literal and invariable, the rate per thousand not being admissible for any number of hundreds less—and they are based on the positive condition that the selections of varieties shall be left to ourselves; pledging ourselves, however, that the choice of our correspondents shall be complied with as nearly as may be, and that our selections be composed of the best leading popular sorts, in due proportion, with more or less of the new popular kinds, according to our ability to supply them.

To Correspondents.

FIRST.—Write your Name, Place of Residence, County and State, so legibly that it cannot be mistaken. Disappointments not attributable to us may otherwise ensue.

SECOND.—Give particular directions as to the mode, route or line, by which you would have your packages conveyed, and to whose care you would have them consigned. For want of action in these particulars, we shall forward them according to the best of our judgment; and we expressly desire it to be understood that all responsibility on our part, as to the goods, ceases on delivering them to the forwarders Tecumseh, and that to the forwarders alone purchasers must look, for all losses by detention, injury, or miscarriage.

THIRD.—Inform us immediately of an error, omission or oversight, should any occur, when it shall be properly adjusted.

FOURTH.—Our terms of payment are Cash, or satisfactory note or acceptance, payable at Bank. Remittance by Check or Draft, should always be made payable to our order

50,000 APPLES.—Standard trees; High and Hardy, best varieties selected by us, pr. thousand $120,00.

The Rural American.

THE best practical, agricultural and family paper in the United States, is the RURAL AMERICAN, published at Utica N. Y. It is issued on the 1st and 15th of each month at the very low price of 50 cents a year in advance, and it is about the same size, and contains quite as much reading matter as the $2 agricultural weeklies of the day. The second voltmn commenced in January, and it is now circulated in all the States and Territories in the Union, and bids fair to outstrip, eventually, in circulation all similar papers. The great feature of its present success is the offering of a very valuable COLLECTION OF REMEDIES FOR THE CURE OF THE DISEASES OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS, at 50 cts. Any one to all persons who get up a small club of four subscribers for six months, at 25 cts. each, and remit $1 therefor. The proprietor has been about ten years collecting the materials, at a great cost, for said work, comprising about 300 letters and receipts, from the most extensive stock breeders of of the U. States and Europe, and it is worth ten times the price to any stock breeder in the country. All the diseases to which cattle, horses sheep and swine are subject are embraced in the collection, and plain directions given to effect their cures. Samples of the Rural American, containing the details of this liberal offer, and its club agents, will be sent free to all applicants. Local agents are wanted in every town in the United States, and very liberal terms are offered to traveling agents in any State. Apply to the Editor

The Past.

The Past, with all its mystery, is like a Summer land,
Where I can trace the wisdom of a loving Father's hand,
Where sunshine often lingers, where shadows sometimes fall,
But everything is beautiful, for God hath made it all.

A pilgrim on the desert, far from the murm'ring rills,
Dreams of the gushing fountains among his native hills,
As onward still his footsteps o'er pathless wilds may roam,
His heart is turning ever to the loving ones at home.

And the soul that toils despairing upon the sea of life,
Gazing in the distant Future, weary of the eager strife,
Rests a moment from his labors, forgetting every pain,
Lives in the blissful sunlight of departed joys again.

It may be that the Past was never half so bright
As Fancy loves to picture it in memories holy light,
That 'tis a dream we cherished, as backward still we gaze
On half-forgotten sorrows, and joys of other days.

I know not but such dreams as these are to the spirit given
By angel guests, whose presence brings a vision bright of Heaven;
But if it be a dream we clasp, a shadow that we see,
If sleeping, thus we dream of Heaven, what must the waking be?

The memory of the loved and lost, they who are "gone before,"
Remembrance of the joys and hopes that come to us no more,
On the dim shore of the Future stand forth with outstretched hand,
To guide our wand'ring footsteps up to the silent land.

There's Nothing Lost.

There's nothing lost. The tiniest flower
That grows within the darkest vale,
Though lost to view, has still the power
The rarest perfume to exhale;
That perfume, borne on zephyr's wings,
May visit some lone sick one's bed,
And like the balm affection brings,
'Twill scatter gladness round her head.

There's nothing lost. The drop of dew
That trembles in the rose-bud's breast
Will seek its home of either blue,
And fall again as pure and blest;
Perchance to revel in the spray,
Or moisten the dry, parching sod,
Or mingle in the mountain spray,
Or sparkle in the bow of God.

There's nothing lost. The seed that's cast
By careless hands upon the ground
Will yet take root, and may at last
A green and glorious tree be found;
Beneath its shade, some pilgrim may
Seek shelter from the heat of noon,
While in its boughs the breezes play,
And song birds sing their sweetest tune.

There's nothing lost. The slightest tone
Or whisper from a loved one's voice
May melt a heart of hardest stone,
And make a saddened heart rejoice;
And then, again, the careless word
Our thoughtless lips to often speak,
May touch a heart already stirred,
And cause that troubled heart to break.

There's nothing lost. The faintest strain
Of breathings from some dear one's lute
In memory's dream may come again,
Though every mournful string be mute;
The music of some happier hour,
The harp that swells with love's own words,
May thrill the soul with deepest power,
When still the hand that swept its chords.

The Sexton.

Nigh to the grave that was newly made,
Leaned the sexton old on his earth-worn spade,
His work was done, and he paused to wait
The funeral train through the open gate;
A relic of by-gone days was he,
And his locks were white as the foamy sea—
And these words came from his lips so thin,
"I gather them in! I gather them in!

"I gather them in! for man and boy,
Year after year of grief and joy,
I've builded the houses that lie around
In every nook of this burial ground,
Mother and daughter, father and son,
Come to my solitude one by one—
But come they strangers, or come they kin,
I gather them in! I gather them in!

"Many are with me, but still I'm alone!
I'm king of the dead—and I make my throne
On a monument slab of marble cold;
And my scepter of rule is the spade I hold.
Come they from cottage, or come they from hall
Mankind are my subjects,—all, all, all!
Let them loiter in pleasure, or toilfully spin,
I gather them in! I gather them in!

"I gather them in—and their final rest
Is here, down here in the earth's dark breast"—
And the sexton ceased for the funeral train
Wound mutely over that solemn plain;
And I said to my heart, when time is told,
A mightier voice than that sexton's old
Will sound o'er the last tramp's dreadful din—
"I gather them in; I gather them in."

☞ The deacon who took up a collection, by some queer mistake laid it down again—somewhere. It was found in the side-pocket of his overcoat six days after. Such mistakes will occur.

☞ Thou canst not joke an enemy into a friend, but thou mayst joke a friend into an enemy.

☞ Brave actions are the substance of life, and good sayings are the ornament of it.

A SUDDEN CONVERSION.

In one of the northern towns of Vermont lived a young man, Daniel Bryan, a lawyer by profession. No one possessed the confidence of his friends more than he did, and no one was better calculated to secure the good will and friendship of all with whom he came in contact. Business poured in upon him, and he failed not to give the utmost satisfaction.

At the age of twenty-seven, Bryan took to himself a wife from among the most favored ones of the country. Mary Felton experienced a strange pride when she gave her hand to the young lawyer; and if one envied her, many at least prayed that they might be equally fortunate.

But ere long a cloud came over the scene. Conviviality ran high among the members of the bar, and Bryan possessed one of those peculiar temperaments which at length give the body and soul up to the demon. For three years he followed the social custom of the times without neglecting much of his business, but finally he sank into the lowest pit of degradation. When at the age of thirty five, he became a confirmed drunkard. He now neglected his clients altogether, for he could not remain sober long enough at any time to carry any case through court. The only business he now had was the collection of some debts.

On the evening of his thirty-fifth birthday he joined the Washingtonians, and once more his bright genius shone out upon the world. But it could not last long amid the examples of those who were his constant companions; he sank as rapidly as he had risen. In one short year from that he was a miserable degraded being. People who had left notes and accounts with him to collect, called at his house, and upon enquiring of his wife where he could be found, she would tell them he was away. Poor woman, they could not bear to dispute her, and they know full that the remains of Daniel Bryan were prostrate upon his bed-room floor.

One day a Mr. Vinson went to see him. Vinson had left notes to the amount of several thousand dollars with Bryan to collect, and he was anxious about them. His poor wife answered him as usual—that her husband had gone away.

"My dear madam," returned Mr. Vinson, 'I know your misfortune, and I appreciate your feelings, but I must see your husband. If I can see him one minute, I can learn all I wish to know.'

Mary Byran spoke not a word, but with a tearful eye turned away, and Mr. Vinson followed her. He found Byran in a back room, lying upon the floor, with a jug of Medford rum by his side. With much effort Vinson aroused the poor inebriate to a sense of semi consciousness, and asked him if he had done anything about the notes and accounts which he had left with him. 'Yes,' answered the lawyer, in a weak, hiccoughing voice, 'I've had the money for you over a month.—I've deducted the per centage, and you will find the rest in that trunk, Mary 's got the key.'

Mary Byran was called in, the key was produced, and Mr. Vinson found his money—four thousand and some odd hundreds of dollars—all right and safe.

In his worst moments Bryan never used for himself a single penny in trust. Hundreds there were who worked hard to reclaim the wanderer, but without effect.—Years went by, and he sank lower and lower, yet his wife left him not. Her brother, a young lawyer, named Moses Felton, often urged her to forsake her husband, at the same time offering her a comfortable home beneath 1 s own roof, but she would not listen.

At length all hope was given up. Week after week would the fallen man be drunk on the floor, and not a day of real sobriety marked his course. I doubt if such another case was known. He was too low for conviviality, for those with whom he would have associated would not drink with him.

All alone in his office and chamber, he still continued to drink and even his very life seemed the offspring of his jug.

In early spring Moses Felton had a call to go to Ohio. Before he set out he visited his sister. He offered to take her with him, but she would not go.

'But why stay you here?' argued the brother. 'You are all faded away and disease is upon you. Why should you live with such a brute?'

'Hush, Moses; speak not,' answered the wife, keeping back the tears. 'I will not leave him now, but he will soon leave me. He cannot live much longer.

At that moment Daniel entered the apartment. He looked like a wanderer from the tomb. He had his hat on, and his jug in his hand.

'Ah—Moses—how are ye?' he gasped, for he could not speak plainly.

The visitor looked at him for a few moments in silence. Then, as his features assumed a cold, stern expression, he said, in strongly emphasized tones:

'Daniel Bryan, I have been your best friend but one. My sister is an angel—but mated with a demon. I have loved you, Daniel, as I never loved man before; you were noble, generous, and kind, but I hate you now, for you are a perfect devil incarnate. Look at that woman. She is my sister—she now might live with me in comfort, only she will not do it while you are alive; yet when you die she will come to me Thus do I pray that God will soon give her joys to my keeping.—Now Daniel, I do sincerely hope that the first intelligence which reaches me from my native place after I have reached my new home, may be—THAT—YOU—ARE—DEAD!'

Bryan gazed upon the speaker some moments without speaking. 'Moses,' he at length said, 'you are not in earnest?'

'As true as heaven, Daniel, I am.—When I know that you are dead, I shall be happy, and not until then—so go on Fill your jug and—'

'Stop, Moses, I can reform.'

'You can not. It is beyond your power, you have had inducements enough to have reformed half the sinners of creation, and yet you are lower than ever before. Go and die sir, as soon as you can, for the moment that sees you thus, shall find me among the mourners.'

Byran's eyes flashed, and he drew himself up proudly. 'Go,' he said with a tone of the old, powerful sarcasm that had often electrified a jury, 'go to Ohio, and I'll send you news. Go sir, and watch the post.'

With these words Daniel Bryan hurled his jug into the fire-place, and while yet a thousand pieces were flying over the floor, he strode from the house. Mary sank fainting on the floor. Moses bore her to a bed, and then having called in a neighbor, he hurried away, for the stage was waiting.

For a month Daniel moved over the brink of the grave, but he did not die.

'One gill of brandy will save you,' said the doctor, who saw that the abrupt removal of all stimulants from a system that for long years had subsisted on almost nothing else was nearly sure to prove fatal. 'You can surely take a gill, and not more?'

'Aye,' gasped the poor man, 'take a gill and break my oath. Moses Felton shall never hear that brandy or rum killed me. If the want of it can kill me, then let me die! But I won't die; I'll live till Moses Felton shall eat his words.'

He did live! an iron will conquered the messenger death had sent, and Daniel Bryan lived. For one month he could not even walk without help But he had help—joyful, playful help. Mary helped him.

A year passed away, and Moses Felton returned to Vermont. He entered the Court House at Burlington, and Daniel Bryan was on the floor pleading for a young man who had been indicted for forgery. Felton started with surprise.—Never before had Bryan looked so noble and commanding, and never before had such torrents of eloquence poured from his lips. The case was given to the jury, and the youth was acquitted. The successful counsel turned from the court room, and he met Moses Felton.

They shook hands, but did not speak. When they reached a spot where no one could hear them, Bryan stopped. 'Moses,' he said, 'do you remember the words you spoke to me a year ago?'

'I do, Daniel.'

'Will you now take them back—unsay them now and forever?'

'Yes, with all my heart.'

'Then I am in part repaid.'

'And what must be the remainder of the payment?' asked Moses.

'I must die an honest, unperjured man. The oath that has bound me thus far was made for life.'

That evening Mary Bryan was among the happiest of the happy. No allusion was made in words to that strange scene of one year before; but Moses could read in the countenances of his sister and her husband the deep gratitude they did not speak.

And Daniel Bryan yet lives, one of the most honored men of Vermont. Five times has he sat in the State Legislature; thrice in the Senate, and once in the national Congress, and he is yet an ornament to society, declines all offers of public offices, from the fact that his profession is more lucrative; while plenty of others wanted the offices which he cared not for.

The Shadow of Life.

We have rarely met with anything more beautiful than the following, which we find in the New York Mirror, of a recent date:

"All that live must die;
Passing there nature to eternity."

Men seldom think of the great event of death until the dark shadow falls across their own path, hiding forever from their eyes the faces of the loved ones, whose living smile was the sunlight of their existence. Death is the great antagonism of life, and the cold thought of the tomb is the skeleton in all our feasts.

We do not want to go through the dark valley, although its passage may lead to Paradise; and, with Charles Lamb, we do not wish to lie down in the medley grave even with kings and princes for our bedfellows. But the fiat of nature is inexorable. There is no appeal or reprieve from the great law that dooms us all to dust.—We flourish and fade like the leaves of the forest, and the frailest flower that blooms and withers in a day, has not a frailer hold on life than, the mightiest monarch that has ever shook the earth by his footsteps. Generations of men appear and vanish like the grass, and the countless multitude that swarms the world to-day will to-morrow disappear like footprints on the shore:

"Soon as the rising tide shall beat,
Each trace will vanish from the sand."

In the beautiful drama of Ion, the instinct of immortality so eloquently uttered by the death-devoted Greek, finds a deep response in every thoughtful soul.—It is nature's prophecy of life to come.—When about to yield his young existence as a sacrifice to fate, his betrothed Clemanthe asks if they shall not meet again; to which he replies: "I have asked that dreadful question of the flowing streams that flow forever; of the stars, among whose fields my raised spirit hath walked in glory. All were dumb. But while I gaze upon thy living face, I feel there's something in thy love which mantles thro' its beauty that cannot wholly perish. We shall meet again, Clemanthe."

A GREAT EVIL NOT REMOVED.—A Conference preacher one day went to the house of a Wesleyan Reformer, and saw, suspended on the walls, the portraits of three expelled ministers.

'What,' said he. 'you have them there?'

'Oh, yes, they are there,' was the answer.

'But one is wanted to complete the set.'

'Pray, who is that?'

Why, the devil, to be sure.'

'Ah,' said the Reformer, 'He is not yet expelled from the Conference.'

☞ A livery-stable keeper in Albany, having a bad debt on hand, recently sent one of his men with a hearse to drive up to his debtor's door, and to wait there until his bill was paid. To every person who came out of the house, the hearse-driver presented his bill, and, as might be expected, the demand was soon liquidated.

☞ 'The candles you sold me last were very bad,' said Suett, to a tallow chandler.

'Indeed sir, I am very sorry for that.'

'Yes sir; do you know that they burnt to the middle and would then burn no longer.'

'You surprise me; what, sir, did they go out?'

'No, sir, no; they burnt shorter.'

☞ 'Wife! why in the name of goodness, did you not make the washerwoman put starch in my collar?' 'Why, my dear, I thought it an useless waste of the article, for I can get your choler up so easy without it.'

☞ There is a family in Ohio so lazy that it takes two of them to sneeze—one to throw the head back and the other to make the noise.

☞ Law is like prussic acid—a dangerous remedy, and the smallest dose is generally sufficient.

☞ A landlord having the misfortune to admit as a lodger into his house an individual named Bell, of doubtful reputation, turned him out the other day, remarking that—

"He would not keep a bell in his house that wanted hanging!"

☞ A thief broke out of jail in Aberdeen, but being captured, told the policeman that he had conscientious scruples about travelling on Sunday. "Honest Iago!"

☞ The test of our enjoyment is the remembrance which it leaves behind.

Can I Help You?

Can I help you? Just say the word. There speaks the whole-souled whole-hearted man—the man whose very shadow is worth more than the body, soul and estate, personal and spiritual, of two thirds of our human race bearing the name.—How he lifts the despairing spirit of his brother in trouble. All day he had met with cold eyes, cold smiles, cold words, cold bows, and cold sympathy. Men fly him because they have heard he was unfortunate; and—be a villian, a thief, a murderer, says the world in action, but don't be unfortunate. I'll lend you ten thousand if you are worth fifty: if you are unfortunate— I'm very poor myself—would help you—could have done so three days ago, or three hours ag—obut positively haven't got three cents, nor shan't be in possession of that amount while——your misfortune lasts. If your old aunt dies; or your old uncle, or in fact anybody who chooses to leave you a fortune, why just call upon me; I'll manage to have a little change on hand.

But, look! yonder comes a broad shouldered, frank-browed man, who meets his poor brother with a hearty slap on the shoulder, and Can I help you? just say the word. Don't be afraid now; what's your trouble? Out with it, and if you'd like a little cash just now why say so.—Don't be down-cast; what if you have failed in your expectations once, twice, or thrice? Haven't some of our most successful merchants done the same thing? made mistakes? And where would they have been if they hadn't found friends? Come what do you want—how much? He don't clap his hands in his pocket with a styx-like frown that says as plainly as if he had bawled it out in your ear, no entrance here. He is not one of those dyspeptic, cross grained, surly, monied-machines that squeezes a sixpence till it squeals, and reads a newspaper with a greedy, voracious eagerness, for fear he shall not get his two cents worth. He lives for something else that man, than gain. His passport to Heaven is written on his face, his religion on the hearts of the downcast and sorrowing; in the homes he has made happy by his benevolence.

"Can I help you?"

Write the words in golden letters, for they are only heard on rare occasions.—The sneer, the scoff, the doubt, the refusal—they come with every nightfall and sun rising Niggards grow like mushrooms but angels are scarce. Niggards can never look beyond themselves, their own comfort—their own convenience; no matter who starves next door, they scatter curses in discouragements, and blight over God only knows, how many gentle hearts. They never say, 'Can I help him?" but he's down let's kick him.

But the angelic ministry of those helpers to humanity, men, who believe they were intrusted with powers the gods might envy, that they might be used to some good purpose—what shall we say to them how give them the burning praise they merit? Good, whole-souled generous man the angels and God himself smiles approval when with beaming eyes, and hopeful words, you said to the dispirited brother "Can I help you?"

A "FAST BOY."—We doubt whether the Public Schools often develope a more promising boy than the one in San Francisco, of whom the following anecdote is told:

Recently in one of the city courts, a young lady, his school teacher, was prosecuted by the mother for severely welting the young rascal's back. The case went up to the court, and the verdict of the jury was, in effect, "served him right."

We give a portion of the boy's testimony, the wit of which atones for its rudeness:

"I asked her to do a sum for me and she refused."

"What was the sum?" asked the counsel for the defendant.

"To subtract nine from twenty-eight."

"Couldn't you do that without assistance?"

"I suppose I could—but the arithmetic said I couldn't subtract nine from eight without borrowing ten, and I didn't know where the——to borrow it."

☞ Laziness travels so slow that poverty soon overtakes her.

☞ Society, like silk, must be viewed in all its situations, or its colors will deceive us.

☞ The world makes us talkers, but solitude makes us thinkers. No doubt; but the latter tends to stagnate and rustify considerably, too.

Night Musings.

I do remember now an hour of joy,
Deep and delicious happiness, that left
Its light within my soul. Then was I learned
Thy powers sweet poesy, to thrill each string
In our whole spirit's being; to call forth
The hidden powers of feelings, to expand
The soul with new formed images of light,
That had been latent in all spirits depths.

'Twas eve, a time of sweet bewitching beauty,
And I was rowing by my open casement;
Watching in quiet idleness the sky,
As it sat on its mantle of rich hues,
And bound its forehead with the gems of night,
For one by one upon the brow of heaven
Shone forth the starry circle, and more bright,
A hemisphere of gold the half filled moon,
Glowed in the great tiara. Gentle winds,
Wafted the perfume from night's fragrant flowers,
That op'd their petals to her softer beams,
And many a low sweet murmer glided by,
Making a wild Eolian melody.—

Sweet quiet thoughts were busy in my heart,
And many a gentle memory of friends,
The lovely and pure hearted and with these,
Those bright glad beings which my fancy wrought
To fill life's future drama, wore a chain
Of sweet emotions wrapping me in dreams.

The moon was now at her meridian height,
And shed a clear soft light, that fell upon
An open volume lying at my side—
I held it to the moonlight and did read.
'Twas there, upon that open page, I found,
What I, so oft, had indistinctly felt,
But yet could find no language to describe,
Pourtrayed with a sweet charm, that rivalled e'en
That which it did describe. My heart's wild thrill
And the warm glow upon my cheek, alone
Gave utterance to my feelings. And I wept
With pure delight, that earth should be so bright,
And man could feel, and give it utterance.
It was like communing with spirit in the depths
Of earths unnumbered beauties, finding still
What so delighted us in nature, made
More lovely by description.—

And since that hour
There's not a twinkling star, nor flower, nor tree,
But yields a thrill of pleasure, for the sight
Brings that sweet portraiture, in spirit's hues,
To my enraptured memory, to give
New charms to Nature, which hath ever held
My spirit in her worship.

Such the power,
Of poetry, to sway the mind, and bring
Its sweetest, deepest feelings into life,
Touching the finer and more subtle strings
Of that strange instrument, the human heart.

A Stray Waif.

What good does it do for me to sit here idly dreaming of what I "might do," if I had free scope to act, my own will. I might ponder for two centuries and be no nearer the end of my schemes. But there is no path. I must cut my own way and although it be rugged and difficult, I must toil on the steep ascent, and alone surmount all obstacles if I wish to reach the top of that glorious mount of scienc and fame.

It would be my heart's highest and holiest aim, to stand on the highest pinnacle, and reach down my hand to those laboring and suffering under stern difficulties and guide them up the stony way until they reached my side filled with the same desires. Oh! it would be a glorious thing to achieve. And to be learned in science and literature, I could better far face the cold blasts of this selfish wintry world.

And yet we must begin at home with industry and integrity, those noble virtues and qualities must grow up in the sheltering soil of home love, ere a nation can lean upon us in their peril.' Whatever purposes a person forms at home in the hours of his youth those will he carry out when he becomes a man. All influence and power whether good or bad have their birth in the family circle. Then if a world's highest hopes and civilization depends upon our first impressions how careful should parents and teachers be in cultivating the young mind If we wish to reap an abundant harvest of real peace and happiness on this earth, the family circle is the only place where we can sow the seeds. There is more real wealth in one child's intellect properly cultivated, than in a thousand banks of base gold Happy it is for us that our beloved land presents such a wide field for us to labor in and ready workers to lend us a brother's help. Our own state has offered rare facilities for education Colleges for both sexes are within reach of all lovers of learning, and they are doing their part in educating the future rulers and citizens of our Union. Fresh proofs of their prosperity are famished daily by the numbers that crowd their classic halls and the large classes that of graduates that come forth and take their places by the side of the wise and mighty. The names of Michigan Universities are going steadily up the scale of American Colleges. A bright future is in store for our beloved "Peninsular state," and may she prove no unfruitful worker in the field of American Educational interests.

Let us make it the first object of our heart's interests to discharge the duties of high learning, and we will find means to make it fruitful in goodness to ourselves as likewise our country.

Increase of Crime.

It cannot be denied that crime is far more common in this portion of the State, than it used to be. There was a time when only a very small portion of each term of our Courts of Record was required for the criminal calender

But it is not so now In fact scarcely a term of Court goes by without adding its half dozen or more new recruits from old Lenawee, to our State Penitentiary. A criminal trial in this county used to excite a wide spread interest. Now it is a matter of comparative indifference.—Yet every poor unhappy culprit, shut out by his crimes from the free air of heaven, and the sweet converse of his kind, is perchance a son, a father, or a brother, who, once in innocent childhood played by his mother's side, or sat upon his father's knee, the fond centre of human affection, sympathy and hope.

It cannot then be a matter of indifference to any, that so many are thus year after year falling hopelessly away from our very midst; for those same influences, and that same poor human nature weakly struggling with strong temptation, may, or ever we are aware, consign some dearly cherished one, we know not by whom of us, to the same melancholy doom.

Certain at least it is, that only an ordinary regard to a common good, should put us upon a more careful inquiry as to the causes of this increasing commoness of crime, and the further solution of the question, whether, as a community, we have done faithfully what we could to anticipate and prevent, as well as to punish it. Those who do not do this, thereby needlessly exposing the young and inexperienced, to the various and subtle enticements and allurements to sin, which, unless carefully watched by the argus eyes of a vigilant community, and kept in check by the strong arm of executed law, must meet them at every step, do themselves and the community a fatal wrong.—Men cannot wink at, or even overlook the incipient growth of crime about them, with a lasting impunity, so true is it, that, "They enslave their children's children, who make compromise with sin."

The law is indeed for the protection of the state, but no law will execute itself. nor will it be long feared by the criminally disposed, if regarded by those around them with manifest indifference. Yet a neglected law, may and often will be found, though powerless for the protection of the innocent, yet fearfully severe for the punishment of the transgressor.

We have been led to these remarks, from observing, while our courts are thus sending up from term to term convicts from our midst, with what apparent indifference, the entire community looks upon utter and open disregard of the law, which pervades the various drinking and gambling saloons, with which our village is cursed, where our children are daily exposed to the learning of practices, and formation of habits alike ruinors to their morals and health, and where the older and more confirmed victims of vice are completing their training for the disturbance and contamination of society while still at large, and the dark damp shadows, and the degrading fetters of a prisoner's cellat the last.

PETERSON'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.—We notice as in press and ready for sale on Saturday, September 26, a new work by the late Mrs Caroline Lee Hentz, entitled the "Lost Daughter." From the well known character of Mrs Hentz, as being one of the best, and most graceful of the female writers of this country, we take pleasure in recommending the above work.

Also, from the same press, Mrs. Hale's Receipts for the Million, relating to the useful, ornamental, and domestic arts, which will be ready for delivery on Saturday, October 3d. The prices of the above works neatly bound, is $1.25 each. By remitting the price to T. B. Peterson, No 306, Chestnut St., Philadelphia, the books will be sent free of postage.

It will be seen that in one or two instances no first premium has been awarded, the award having been thrown out, by the Executive Committee, in consequence of the same article having drawn the first premium the year previous, or of some other defect or irregularity, in which case the second award has been left to stand as awarded by the Judges.

The committee of Arrangements also tender their thanks to the citizens of the village of Tecumseh, for their liberality in defraying the expenses of erecting the necessary buildings and preparing the grounds for the late Fair, without charge to the Society.

THE GREATEST STEAM INVENTION YET—The Baton Rouge Gazette, under the above heading, has the following:

WM ST MARTIN, of this city, has invented an engine which can be constructed, boiler and all, for about $50. The machine is so simple that we might with propriety say it is merely an escape pipe, taking up no more room. The steam is admitted into the centre of a drum or cylinder, in which the shaft works, from this power is applied directly, without further friction. The other day we saw the perfected model of the engine pumping water about 20 feet, and throwing it into a reservoir at the brewery. This is the apparatus wanted for getting in a cheap manner one or two horse power to drive small machinery Mr. St Martin has made application for letters patent, and when he gets them we think he has a fair protpect ahead to realize something from the result of his genius.

A Regular Jack Sheppard.

An intensely laughable robbery was perpetrated at the Jarret House, St. Anthony, on Thursday night, which in boldness eclipses any similar enterprise of modern times. Col. H. Wiltse, hearing some body knocking around in the hall near his room, at an unreasonable hour, and suspecting it might be some villian who meant to rob him, rose from his bed fixed the door of his room open, got his brace of pistols, and prepared them for "an emergency," then sat down on the bed to wait for the anticipated scamp to present himself. In this position he fell asleep!—and while enjoying a perpindicular dream, (probably of a robber writhing with a bullet in his thorax,) the ungrateful and inconsiderate vagabond aforesaid, walked into the room through the open door, helped himself to a new dress coat, two pair of pantaloons and a vest, pocketed sixty dollars and fifty cents in money, deliberately became an accomplice of procrastination (the thief of time) by stealing a valuable gold watch took the gold studs out of the shirt of the slumberer, and reluctantly departed! Mr W awoke just in time to see his "victim" vamoosed, and himself minus property to the amount of $200 or $300, In fact almost everything in the room had "gone off," except his faithful pistols, which were firmly grasped in either hand ready capped and cocked! The funny gentleman with the dark lantern has not been seen or heard of since.—St. Paul Times, Sept 7th

FROM CUBA.—In Havana, the vomito was unabated. The report of the crops in the interior of the Island were very flattering. The report that the vomito was in Sagua la Grande is denied. A cargo of Minie rifles had arrived from Spain.

"Are you mate of the ship? asked an emigrant of the cook, who was an Irishman. "No, sir; I'm the man that cooks the mate.

General News.

The Central America.

CHARLESTOWN, Sept 18.

Last night's despatch embraced all the facts known concening the loss of the Central America. The Eloise was making for Norfolk.

NORFOLK, Sept. 18.

The Central America foundered on Saturday Fifty passengers were relieved by the Eloise, including 26 females and have arrived in Hampton Roads. The officers were all lost except James Fraser, the second officer. Chief engineer Ashby took a boat and deserted the ship. Two millions in specie is lost. The following is a despatch to M. O. Roberts:

NORFOLK, Sept. 18.

The Central America foundered at sea on Saturday evening at 8 o'clock 50 passengers were rescued from peices of the wreck by a Norwegian bark and brought into Hampton Roads. Twenty six females were taken from the ship by a brig of yours previously. The officers were all lost except Mr Ashby who took a boat and deserted the ship. I start for New York with the surviving passengers at 10 A M.

(Signed) J. McGOWAN,
Commander Steamship, Empire City.

SAVANNAH, Sept 18.

The bark Saxony arrived here this morning with 5 of the passengers of the Central America She reports the total loss of the vessel, treasure, and mails, and about five hundred of the passengers and crew. She reports that 40 women and children were saved by the brig Marine of Boston.

The sea was very heavy. 49 other passengers of the Central America were picked up by the bark Eloise. The names of the 5 passengers saved by the Saxony are H. H. Childs of New York, Jabez Howes, of San Francisco; Geo W. Look of Maine, and A. Fendericks of San Francisco.

NORFOLK, Sept. 18.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 20.

Mr. Ashby, cheif engineer, of the Central America, left here last evening for N York. He says he is ready to meet any investigation that may be ordered. As to his conduct in leaving the vessel, or the manner in which he performed his duty, he says that he left the boat by the Captain's orders, to arrange with the Captain of the brig Marine to bring his vessel closer. and the boat refused to return to the steamer with him, all deserting the boat.—A number of destitute widows and orphans are here, and collections are being made for their relief. $2,000 was subscribed for this purpose at Norfolk.

NEW YORK, Sept. 21.

The Empire City, from Norfolk, arrived yesterday, bringing 92 of the survivors from the Central America, being those saved by the Ellen and Marine—She met the latter ship going into Norfolk, and transferred such as desired to come on her. Mr. Douglass Rutherford, of Oakland, Jefferson County, stood near Captain Hernson and the Chief Engineer at the time the latter proposed to leave the steamer. Ashby went up to the Captain and intimated that he was going in that boat. Captain H. replied that he had no right to do so, and that it was his (Ashby's) duty to stick to his post The engineer said "if you will let me go, I will bring back the two boats, and all the boats that can be reached from the brig" Captain H expressed his fears to trust the engineer, but the latter pleaded so hard and promised to exert himself in securing assistance, that Captain H finally consented, when Ashby immediately seized a rope, and let himself down into the boat, and was followed by a passenger. No sooner did the latter reach the boat than Ashby drew a dirk, and swore that he would stab the man unless he would jump overboard Captain H hearing the remark made by him, cried "stop there, you must not do that." As the boat pushed off, Captain H. walked forward on the steamer and called after the engineer, "now I will depend upon your returning with the boats," and the engineer said, "Captain you may depend on my returning." but he failed to do so.

The following are additional names of lost:

Chas. H Boyd, Pat Butler, R. I.; M. Cragen, Wis Lee Davis, H. Dellenburg, Cal.; C. Denour, Philadelphia; H. Deane, Cal; Thomas Fallen, C. Gilkie, Porland Me.; J. G Geosould, R. Hughes, John Horn, and son, Cincinnatti; D. Jones, Pa.; F. A. Jones, Wm. Knight, Lockport; N Y Mr. Leavenworth, Mich; J. Lock, Stockbridge, Mass; John Leonard Buffalo; J. Lobman, Wis.; Capt. Marvine, Buffalo; M. McNeal, Lockport, N. Y. Frank Mikbe, Cal; Oucile, Cincinnatti; D. Stewart, Ohio; Samuel B. Swan, Pittsburg; Stevens, Jersey City; Wm Barnes N Y.; O'Conner, type foundry, N.Y; Robinson & Son, Geo. Gale, Mr. Moce, Capt. Dyer, Mr. Holley, Pittsburg, Passengers saved by the Marine think that others might have been rescued as they saw several lights in the distance on that fatal night. They entertain strong hopes of the safety of Capt Herndon, who was on the wheel house when the ship went down. He was last seen clinging to a plank and struggling manfully for life.

Mr. Paine, San Francisco, supposed to be on board the Marine. Mr. Paine was among the last to leave the Central America Capt. Herndon took his watch from his person and handed it to Paine, saying "give that to my wife, and tell her I am lost, and to keep it in remembrance of me." John Black, boatman, was in the life boat when the ship went down, and saw a fore-and aft schooner sail around her stern and cross her bows a few minutes before. It was so dark that he could not see her name. He thinks she picked up some who were floundering in the water.

The following gentlemen were received on board the Central America at Havana: Ancho Richon, bearer of dispatches to Paris, Consul of Lima, Lequion, Peruvian Minister to the U States, and his secretary, Nicholas Firado, Adolphus Olmeque Ricards Olioque, and Enrique Quolo, of Lima All from Lima are supposed to be lost. Pariquel Esquera of Valparaise and Mr Thoan of Callao, formerly of Philadelphia, are supposed to be lost

PHILADELPHIA, Sept 22.

Messrs R. Patterson & Co., extensive dealers in sugar have failed. Liabilities are very large The failure will have a bad effect in New Orleans.

NEW YORK, Sept. 21.

Chief Engineer Ashby's statements, as to his course, are confirmed by Mr. T. Paine, a merchant of San Francisco.—The latter says that the Cheif Engineer drew his knife to prevent others from jumping into the boat of which he had the charge, and swamping it, and adds that Ashby tried to get a crew to return to the Central America, but without avail. The boats were then lashed astern of the brig and during the night one broke lose and the other was dashed to peices Mr Ashby intends demanding the fullest investigation respecting the facts of his departure from the steamer

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.

OBITUARY.

It is with much pain that we undertake to record the sad news that have reached us from Toledo, Ohio, of the sudden death of our friend Mr. WM GILCHRIST of that place, on Thursday the 17th inst., caused by falling from the 4th tier of joist, on a brick building in process of erection, through an opening in the joist below, a distance of about 40 feet, and striking on the under floor, producing death almost instantly. This is a most painful calamity to an interesting wife and three children who are left to mourn their sudden loss, and will send a pang to the heart of a large circle of friends in this country, as well as in the land of his nativity.

Mr. G. was long and favorably known a citizen of Tecumseh: He was a native of Fifeshire, Scotland, from which place he migrated to this country about 25 years, and soon afterwards settled in this village then only in embryo. He brought with him from his native hills, a healthy and vigorous constitution, to which was added a mind well stored with useful knowledge and mechanical skill—he, with a strong arm and willing heart put his shoulder to the wheel and manfully united with the early settlers in cultivating, improving, and building up, our now beautiful village; and in raising the eye from where we now write, it will rest on many specimens of his industry which will long stand as a memento of WM. GILCHRIST. COM.

We were shown samples of a style of Pocket Book, which was invented by D C. Smith of this place, who is the Patentee. This book will destroy pick-pocket business It is so constructed as to fasten at the option of the owner any portion of his pockets, and cannot be removed without warning the owner. This valuable book will command the attention of the public at large and will find a ready sale It has long been needed by business men who have valuable papers to carry.

We understand, Mr. Smith has a contract with the manufacturers, and will soon be able to supply the demand. Money is hard to get, but if once in C. Smith's pocket book, we venture to say, nothing but a good debt can get out. The quality of the books are excellent, and the price not above the price of common Pocket Books

☞ J. H Osborne & Co are receiving their Fall and Winter stock of boots and shoes.—They warrant their work.

☞ We have received from T. B Miner, publisher of the Northern Farmer & American, a valuable collection of Receipts, all Farmers should have them. Address T B Miner Clinton, Oneida co., N. Y.

LENAWEE COUNTY FAIR.—Half fare only will be charged by the RailRoad for those attending our County fair at Adrian on Wednesday and Thursday, the 7th and 8th of October next by an especial arranement, with the R. R. Co to that effect. A. HOWELL, Sec.

We give timely notice of the above arrangement, that all desiring to avail themselves of it may do so. It is also intended we believe to give an early train on the 8th down to Adrian on the Jackson Branch, and a late return train up in the evening

THE BANK OF TECUMSEH.—The paper of this bank having been protested in N York, and the bank having discontinued its redemption agency in this city, it may be considered as having 'gone up.' If our recollection serves us, we have all along said it would 'go up' at the first gust of monetary agitation.—Det. Free Press.

Simply to vindicate the truth of history, we will inform the Free Press editor and 'the rest of mankind' that Tecumseh bills are taken as usual by the Michigan Southern Railroad, and by many banks and business men in Toledo and Southern Michigan It may be unworthy of confidence, but it has not yet 'gone up,' and appears quiet inclined not to yeild to the present panic.—Toledo Com

The above Bank has promptly paid all demands. The panic it has sustained, was by some Adrian goats who have been drawing 3 cent pieces during the past week, and will probably continue drawing the same for some time, without, we think, affecting the Bank We receive the money, when offered, and think somebody else will be happy to do the same before spring.

Nothing to Wear.

"Nothing to wear!" Well, well, I suppose
Some ladies quite truly declare it,
For their habitual disuse of clothes
Above the waist sufficiently shows
That there, at least, as far as that goes,
They've "nothing to wear"—and THEY WEAR IT

Something to Wear.

AT THE PRINTERS CONVENTION.

Friend Turner editor of the Grand Rapids Eagle has been presented with a clean shirt by a (Mary Ann) a lady friend. He declares his intention to preserve this token of charity as long as he is out of the poor house and occupies the Editorial chair.

PASS HIM AROUND.—A young lady of Detroit going out to California to join her lover, to be married, was grossly swindled in New York City by a couple of runners and scoundrel who keeps the Northern Rail Road Hotel, and an accomplice, the clerk at a ticket office. They charged her $190 for what they averred to be a first class ticket, but on reaching the steamer with only $5 in her pocket, the Central American was found to be a steerage berth, one of the worst in vessel. The young lady was weeping bitterly when the ship sailed. Let the papers of the West make a thief who keeps the Northern Rail Road Hotel notorious.

☞ A gentleman who recently put up at a log tavern in Wisconsin, was awakened by a young man who commenced a serenade thus:

"Oh Sally Rise,
I've called you twice,
And yet you lay and snore!
I pray you awake
And see your Jake,
And ope to him the door or winder,
I care much which for—
It makes but little difference

AT THE

B. J. BIDWELL.

Chicago Street, Tecumseh.

I am now opening a Large, and General Assortment of

Dry Goods and Groceries,

and shall be receiving from week to week, through the Season, any Goods that may be wanted, from the Eastern Manufacturers, and Jobbers of

New York, Boston,

and Other Cities in the East.

I have tried during Nineteen Years of my life the various modes of doing business

Firstly for Cash.
Secondly on Short Credit.
Thirdly, had to take Long Credit, Orders and Accounts.

Lastly, I have been compelled to wait for payment of Goods sold on Six Months time, long enough for a man to visit California, get rich, and return, before payment could be forced or coaxed.

Now I wish to say, to my numerous friends and patrons, that I am thoroughly convinced that the mode of buying goods on time is both injurious to the buyer and seller.

I will hereafter Sell for Ready pay, at such prices that will defy all competion in this Town, State, or the United States.

No one should buy a dollars worth of Goods without calling at the

Great Western Cash Store,

and get the prices. Some are so unfortunate as to be compelled to trade at long credit stores—to those I would say, Call and See what you can save by having the Ready or something as good, to use where you please.

Call one and all, I wish to see the light of your countenance, and the cash from your pockets.

The Crops.

Our friends, in various sections of the country, have kindly sent us many statements in regard to the crops, from time to time, which we have reluctantly committed to publish for want of room. The grain harvest, take all sections of the country into consideration; will be very large, and the price of wheat, rye, barley and oats must consequently, decline. We are not so certain in regard to the price of corn. It will be lower than at present—perhaps quite low in October and November; when in the midst of harvesting, but it is our opinion that after the crop is housed the price will be abundantly remunerating Potatoes will be cheap, unless the rot shall effect them more severely than is now anticipated. Hay is superabundant. Never before did the earth produce so bountiful a crop as in 1857. Cattle will command a high price, whether fodder be scare or abundant, as it is impossible to overstock the eastern market for slaughtering.

The following is an estimate of the wheat and corn crops of the Western States for 1857, as compared with the official report, made by the government in 1849. It is not pretended that this statement will be strictly correct; but it is, probably, sufficiently so, to give a fair general view of the increase of the staple productions of the country in any season, and particularly in 1857:

Wheat crop of 1849.	Bushels.	Crop of 1857. Bushels, (est.)

Burrying Potatoes.

When a farmer has a dry piece of land near his house, a small knoll or hill, and has a large crop of potatoes, which he desires to keep till spring, it is better to bury them than to store them in his cellar, besides being cheaper and easier in most cases.—They will keep pretty well, when buried in any manner, provided they be not exposed to dampness and frost;—but the following plan is a good one:

First dig the pit on soil that no rain will settle in and wet the potatoes.—Four or five feet deep will do, in an oblong shape. Then, as soon as your potatoes are thoroughly dried, take the longest straw you have, and line the sides and bottom of the pit, six inches thick at least. Then fill with potatoes and raise the heap as high as the potatoes will lie, without spreading beyond the limits of the pit, which will be in the centre some two feet above the level of the soil in a common sized pit. Then cover with straw, the butts resting on the ground, and in a manner that would shed rain if not covered, when the whole should be covered with earth, firmly packed, and in a roof like shape, and at least 18 inches or two feet deep on all sides. On the top of the earth, then place a couple wide boards, nailed together in the form of a roof, and we will warrant your potatoes to come out in the following spring in the best condition.—Rural American.

The Potatoe Disease.—It is useless to read the long, dull essays on the potato disease, that we frequently see in the papers. All that can be done to prevent the rot is to plant early. Cutting off the tops, or sprinkling them with lime, plaster, or any thing else, will not be found a remedy.

Top your Corn

We recommend to farmers, who have been in the habit of cutting up their corn by the roots, to try the plan of topping, even if it be but a single acre—just to try the experiment.—The proper time to top is when the tops begin to wither, but while the stalks and leaves are fresh and green. Get a few common shoe knives for your hands, and a sand stone to sharpen them, and cut just above the butts of the ears; in a slanting upward direction, holding the entire stalks of each hill in your left hand, as you clip them. At proper distances, lay the tops in bundles, of the size of a sheaf of wheat; and towards night, bind them with a couple of corn tops; and stook or "shock" them up—as they say in New England, rather loosely, so that the air can circulate through them, and cap each "shock" with a bundle bound near the tops, to carry off the rain. When cured sufficiently, carry them to your barn, and lay them loosely upon your hay mow, or upon a scaffold over your barn floor, made of poles placed a foot apart. It will be good for sore eyes to see how greedily your cattle will devour these "stalks," as we call them "down east." If cut fine in a machine, and mixed with bran mashes for your stock, so much the better; but that is not at all necessary. We are satisfied that the nutrition in a bundle of these stalks is greater than in the same weight of ordinary hay. The cutting is done very rapidly—say two acres a day to each hand. The corn ripens rapidly after topping, and leaves it in a fair condition to be husked in the field, when the remaining stalks may be cut with a scythe, stacked near the barn, and fed out to stock during the winter.

Devon and Durham.

The Devon cattle are excellent for milk, work and the butcher. The steers are easily broken to the yoke, and work free, making the best of working oxen and when of a suitable age to send to market, they fatten very easily on good pasture. When the cows are dry they take on flesh remarkably quick, and with moderate food. Their milk is rich, and they rank among the best dairy cows. They endure the extremes of heat and cold well, and will thrive on pastures, where the Durhams would nearly starve. They are uniformly of a dark red color, and their horns are short and beautifully turned. On smooth lands of luxriant growth of grass, and where beef is high the Durcattle are the most profitable for the beef market. They cannot, however, stand severe cold as well as the Devons. The cows are only good milkers by chance. A No. 1 Devon bull will sell for from one to two thousand dollars.

Don't Winter too much Stock.—By and by it will be winter, and we advise you to dispose of all the stock you cannot winter well. Nothing is gained by keeping 20 head of cattle, and four or five horses, on the fodder that 15 head, and two horses, will consume. Skin and bones, when connected with vitality, are not worth so much by 50 per cent, as they are when associated with flesh and fat. We have seen one yoke of oxen and a span of horses able to do in the spring as much as two other yoke of oxen, and span horses, that were kept on short rations during the winter. Depend upon it farmers, you gain nothing by keeping more stock than you can keep in good condition.

Blood Stock killed by Heat.—A splendid blooded bull, recently imported at a cost $1,800, died on the wharf in Philadelphia, on being landed from the ship. Such animals should never imported, except to arrive in October or November.

Blight in Pear Trees.—The blight in pear trees may be arrested, when trees begin to affected by removing the diseased limbs, cuting them off a little below the diseased parts, where the wood is healthy.

Mortgage Sale.

Mortgage Sale.—Default having been made in the payment of a certain Mortgage bearing date the Twenty-fifth day of September in the year one thousand and eight hundred and forty-six executed by John S. McKay to James Gaion and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Lenawee and State of Michigan on the 26th day of September A. D. 1846—in Liber J of Mortgages on folios 54 & 55, which Mortgage was duly assigned by the said James Gaion to John Bangs by deed of Assignment bearing date May 16th A. D. 1854, and recorded in the Register's Office for the county of Lenawee aforesaid, July 5th 1854 in Liber S of Mortgages on folio 492 and on which Mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date hereof, the sum of Two Hundred and Sixty-Five Dollars.

Notice is therefore herby given, that by virtue of the power of sale in said Mortgage contained, and pursuant to the Statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in said Mortgage as follows, to wit:

All that certain tract or parcel of land situate in the township of Raisin in the County of Lenawee and State of Michigan known and described as follows: The north west quarter of the south west quarter of section number three in township no. six south of range no. four east, containing forty acres of land more or less," or so much thereof as shall be necessary to pay the amount due on said Mortgage, and the costs and expenses of foreclosure and sale will be sold at public auction at the Circuit Court Room in the City of Adrian on the Twenty Fourth day of August next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day.

Patent Medicines.

A Medicine that Never Debilitates.

DR. SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR, OR LIVER REMEDY.

Has all the good qualities of a Purgative medicine, answering the purposes of any Cathartic without the debilitating effects experienced from most purgatives. It acts slowly and gently, but surely, moving the bowels to carry off all the secreted matter, at the same time, stimulating the Liver to a proper performance of its functions.

The Invigorator cures the Sick Headache. Take one or two teaspoonsful at each attack and it will soon disappear. For an overloaded stomache, or when food rises or sours, take the Invigorator after eating, and it will not prove disagreeable or oppressive. For Heartburn, Palpitation, or difficult breathing take a teaspoonful once or twice daily. For Loss of Appetite, Langu or Listlessness, the medicine is invaluable. It will restore the appetite and make the food digest well.—Nightmare take a teaspoonful on retiring, and the demons of dream-land will all be fairies. After eating a heavy dinner, take a dose of Invigorator and it will relieve all oppression or fullness. The Invigorator is a Liver Remedy of unequalled virtue, acting directly on that organ, curing Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, Dysentery, Piles Worms, and all Female Obstructions, for which it has no equal.

We know there is nothing now before the American public, prepared with such skill by a scientific man, particularly for diseases of the Liver, as Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver Remedy. It has attained a reputation second to no other article in the world, simply because it rests on its own merit. To convince all by trial that it is all its proprietors claim it to be, if any of our readers are suffering from such diseases as are described in Dr. Sanford's advertisement, we know of no remedy that will so surely cure as the Invigorator.

There has lately been brought to our notice a medicine that seems to possess wonderful, curative and healing properieties in diseases of the Liver, stomach and Digestive Organs. It came to us with so many testimonials in its favor that we have noted its effects in some of the worst cases of continual debility, caused by deranged liver, and in every instance the effect was to relieve or give a permanent cure, Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver remedy is what we refer to. We always dear been credulous about cures by patent medicines, but we are convinced that this medicine, for family use, is not over rated by the host of recommendations it has. Our advice is, for all troubled with Indigestion, Debility or Bowel Complaint, to get a bottle and try it; our word for it, relief will be experienced.

Blessings To The Invalids who use Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, for it will relieve them of their pains as soon as it is taken into their stomach. Pain and misery cannot exist where the Invigorator is used, for it will as surely drive them away, as daylight will banish darkness, of this there can be no doubt to those who try it, for it carries conviction with every dose taken. Another evidence is the thousands of certificates from those who use it or have been cured by it.—Try one bottle, if it does not benefit, then we are mistaken.

AYER'S Cathartic Pills

(SUGAR COATED,)

ARE MADE TO

CLEANSE THE BLOOD AND CURE THE SICK.

Invalids, Fathers, Mothers, Physicians, Philanthropists, read their Effects, and judge of their Virtues.

Headache, Sick Headache, Foul Stomach,

Dr. J. C. Ayer. Sir: I have been a sufferer for years with the worst headache any body can have or see a friend of mine have, and I have used a large number of boxes of your Pills. It seems to arise from a foul stomach, and their cleanse at once. If they will cure where so many fail, the fact is worth knowing.

Yours with great respect, ED. W. PERRIL, Clerk of Senate Chamber.

Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaint,

Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C., 7 Feb., 1857.

Sir: I have used your Pills in my general and hospital practice ever since you made them, and cannot testify to any they are the best cathartic we employ. Their regulating action on the liver is quick and decided, consequently they are an admirable remedy for derangements of the organ. Indeed, I have seldom found a case of biliousness so obstinate that it did not readily yield to them.

Fraternally yours, ALONZO BALL, M. D., Physician of the Marine Hospital.

Dysentery, Relux, and Worms.

Post Office, Harmars, Liv. Co., Mich., Nov. 14, 1856.

Dr. Ayer: Your Pills are the perfection of medicine. They have done my wife more good than I can tell you. She had been sick and pining away for months. Was off to be doctored at great expense, but got so better by then commenced taking your Pills, which soon cured her, by expelling large quantities of worms (dead) from the body. They afterwards cured her and our two children of bloody dysentery. One of our neighbors had had much my wife cured him with two doses of your Pills, which others around us paid from five to twenty dollars doctor bills, and lost much time, without being cured at last even then. Such a medicine as yours, which is actually good and honest, will be prized here.

GEO. J. GRIFFIN, Postmaster.

Indigestion and Impurity of the Blood.

From Rev. J. V. Himes, Pastor of Advent Church, Boston.

Dr. Ayer: I have used your Pills with extraordinary success in my family and among those I am called to visit in distress. To regulate the organs of digestion and purify the blood they are the very best remedy I have ever known, and I can confidently recommend them to my friends.

Yours, J. V. HIMES.

Warsaw, Wyoming Co., N. Y., Oct. 24, 1856.

Dear Sir: I am using your Cathartic Pills in my practice, and find them an excellent purgative to cleanse the system, and purify the fountains of the blood.

JOHN G. MEACHAM, M. D.

Erysipelas, Scrofula, King's Evil, Tetter, Tumors, and Salt Rheum.

From a Stereotyping Machinist of St. Louis, Mo., 4th Nov. 1856.

Dr. Ayer: Your Pills are the paragon of all cathartics, great in medicine. They have cured my little daughter of ulcerous sores upon her hands and feet that defied all other remedies and physicians, and had become incurable for years. For my mother has been long grievously afflicted with blotches and pimples on her skin and in her hair. After our child was cured, she also tried your Pills, and they have cured her. ASA MORGROW.

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and Gout.

Honored Sir: I should be ungrateful for the service your skill has brought me if I did not report my case to you. A cold settled in my limbs and brought on excruciating neuralgic pains, which ended in chronic rheumatism. Notwithstanding I had the best physicians in the country, I grew worse and worse, until by the advice of your agent last agent in Baltimore, Dr. Mackenzie, I tried your Pills. Their effects were slow, but sure. By persevering in the use of them I am now entirely well.

SENATE CHAMBER, Baton Rouge, La., 5 Dec., 1856.

Dr. Ayer: I have been entirely cured by your Pills of Rheumatic Gout—a painful disease that had afflicted me for years. VINCENT SLIDELL.

For Dropsy, Plethora, or kindred Complaints, requiring an active purge, they are an excellent remedy.

For Costiveness or Constipation, and a Dinner Pill, they are agreeable and effectual.

Fits, Suppression, Paralysis, Inflammations, and even Deafness, and Partial Blindness, have been cured by the alterative action of these Pills.

Most of the pills in market contain Mercury, which although a valuable remedy in skilful hands, is dangerous in a public pill, from the dreadful consequences that frequently follow its incautious use. These contain no mercury or mineral substance whatever.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, INFLUENZA, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION,

and for the relief of consumptive patients in advanced stages of the disease.

We need not speak to the public of its virtues. Throughout every town, and almost every hamlet in the American States, its wonderful cures of pulmonary complaints have made it already known. Nay, few are the families in any civilized country on this continent which have not some personal experience of its effects; and fewer yet are the communities any where which have not among them some living trophy of its victory over the subtle and fatal germs disease of the throat and lungs. While it is the most powerful antidote yet known to man for the formidable and dangerous diseases of the pulmonary organs, it is also the pleasantest and safest remedy that can be employed for infants and young persons. Parents should have it in store against the insidious enemy that steals upon them unprepared. We have abundant grounds to believe the CHERRY PECTORAL saves more lives by the suppressions it prevents than those it cures. Keep it by you, and cure your colds while they are curable, and neglect them until no human skill can master the lungs' canker that, fastened on the vitals, sets your life at defiance. All know the dreadful fatality of lung diseases, and that they know too the virtues of this remedy, we need say no more than to assure them it is still made the best that can be. We spare no cost, no toil to produce it the most perfect possible, and thus afford those who rely on it the best assistance which our skill can furnish for their cure.

THE TECUMSEH NURSERY.

CHARLES STRONG, Proprietor.

The liberal encouragement heretofore extended to me, has enabled me from time to time to increase my stock of Nursery products, so that now I have not only one of the largest establishments in this State, but one which is excelled by none other in the quality of our plants. These considerations, together with that other one, moderation in prices, enable us to offer inducements, second to none, to those commencing the business, or buying to sell again. Every care is taken in the training and culture of my trees, while in the Nursery, to fit them properly for the hands of the Planter, regarding symmetry of proportion, and healthfulness of constitution as cardinal points. I would recommend my distant patrons to make their purchases in the autumn for Spring sales, as it is decidedly the best season.

Our packing, for which a charge barely covering the expense is always made, is done in the most faithful manner, my aim being to make my packages good against even the recklessness of Railroad employes—more than this I don't think I can safely promise. Confirmatory of this assurance, it may be performed in me to mention that the excellence of my packing has been publicly noticed in many papers, and that I rarely hear of injury to my Trees on arriving at their destination, even though they may have been long on the way.

The prices for the quantities specified in the annexed list must be understood to be literal and invariable, the rate per thousand not being admissible for any number of hundreds less—and they are based on the positive condition that the selections of varieties shall be left to ourselves; pledging ourselves, however, that the choice of our correspondents shall be complied with as nearly as may be, and that our selections be composed of the best leading standard sorts, in due proportion, with more or less of the new popular kinds, according to our ability to supply them.

To Correspondents

FIRST.—Write your Name, Place of Residence, County and State, so legibly that it cannot be mistaken. Disappointments not attributable to us may thereby be avoided.

SECOND.—Give particular directions as to the mode, route or line, by which you would have packages conveyed, and to whose care you would have them consigned. For want instruction in these particulars, we shall forward them according to the best of our judgment; and we expressly desire to be understood that all responsibility on our part, as to the goods, ceases on delivering them to the forwarders at Tecumseh, and that to the forwarders alone purchasers must look for all losses by detention, injury, or miscarriage.

THIRD.—Inform us immediately of an error, omission or oversight, should any occur, when it will be properly adjusted.

FOURTH.—Our terms of payment are Cash, or satisfactory note or acceptance, payable at Bank. Remittance by Check or Draft, should always be made payable to our order.

The Rural American.

THE best practical, agricultural and family paper in the United States, is the RURAL AMERICAN, published at Utica N. Y. issued on the 1st and 15th of each month at the very low price of 50 cents a year in advance, and it is about the same size, and contains quite as much reading matter as the $2 agricultural weeklies of the day. The seventh volume commenced in January, and it is now circulated in all the States and territories in the Union, and bids fair to outstrip, materially, its circulation all similar papers. A great feature of its present success is the offering of a very valuable COLLECTION OF REMEDIES FOR THE CURE OF THE DISEASES OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS, at 50 cts each to all persons who get up a small club of four subscribers for six months, at 25 cts. each, and remit $1 therefor. The proprietor has been about ten years collecting the materials, at a great cost, for said work, containing about 300 letters and receipts, from the most extensive stock breeders of of the U. States and Europe, and it is worth ten times the price to any stock breeder in the country. All the diseases to which cattle, horses, sheep and swine are subject are embraced in the collection, and plain directions given to effect their cures. Samples of the Rural American, containing the details of this liberal offer, and club agents, will be sent free to all who send cents. Local agents are wanted in every town in the United States, and very liberal terms are offered to traveling agents in every State. Apply to the Editor.

Memories of Loved Ones.

BY FRANCES M. CHESEBRO'

The air is full of angel voices,
Breaking through the silence deep,
Every throb that stirs our being
Leaves a trace of shining feet;
Holy footsteps walk beside us
Clinging to us on our way,
Lift the clogs from off our bosom,
Making room for God's pure day.

Through our busy tide of duties,
Float they round us ever near,
Waking in our selfish natures
Some sweet thought to memory dear;
Toiling weary up the pathway,
Fainting, often sick at soul,
Beckoning ever—ever smiling,
Press the unseen toward the goal.

Every house becomes a Heaven
When an angel's fluttering wing
Stirs the air around the fireside,
Bearing hence a soul with him—
Bearing hence some loved and cherished,
While with wails of sorrow sore,
We reach after, through the darkness,
Groping for the open door—

Where the shining garments flutter
Passing forth from night to day;
Clutch we frantic at the shadows,
Hoping thus to force their stay;
Back we turn with piteous wailing,
Break our stony, trustless hearts,
In the prayer that all must utter
When true souls are called to part.

Then the Heavens are rent asunder,
And a throng of spirit forms
Hover near us with their presence,
Calling on us not to mourn,
No gross shape take they, nor utter
Words that shock our finer sense,
But a holy influence lingers
In the air forever hence.

Every Household, poor or lonely,
Entertains an angel guest,
If on hinges wide and open
Swings the gateway of our breast.
Leave it open, straightway swing it,
Wider, wider ope the door,
And a shining group of spirits
Enter in, and leave no more.

"Over the River."

Over the river they beckon to me—
Loved ones who've crossed to the further side;
The gleam of their snowy robes I see,
But their voices are drowned by the rushing tide
There's one with ringlets of sunny gold,
And eyes, the reflection of heaven's own blue;
He crossed in the twilight, gray and cold,
And the pale mist hid him from mortal view.
We saw not the angels that met him there;
The gate of the city we could not see;
Over the river, over river,
My brother stands waiting to welcome me!

Over the river the boatman pale
Carried another—the household pet;
Her brown curls waved in the gentle gale—
Darling Minnie! I see her yet!
She crossed on her bosom her dimpled hands,
And fearlessly entered the phantom bark;
We watched it glide from the silver sands,
And all our sunshine grew strangely dark.
We know she is safe on the further side,
Where all the ransomed and angels be;
Over the river, the mystic river,
My childhood's idol is waiting for me.

For none return from those quiet shores
Who cross with the boatman cold and pale;
We hear the dip of golden oars,
And catch a gleam of the snowy sail,—
And lo! they have passed from our yearning hearts;
They cross the stream and are gone for aye;
We may not sunder the veil apart
That hides from our visions the gates of day.
We only know that their barks no more
May sail with us o'er life's stormy sea,
Yet somewhere, I know, on the unseen shore
Th y watch, and beckon, and wait for me!

And I sit and think when the sunset's gold
Is flushing river and hill and shore,
I shall one day stand by the water cold,
And list for the sound of the boatman's oar,
I shall watch for a gleam of the flapping sail;
I shall hear the boat as it gains the strand;
I shall pass from sight with the boatman pale
To the better shore of the spirit land.
I shall know the loved who have gone before,
And joyfully greet will the meeting be,
When over the river, the peaceful river,
The angel of Death shall carry me.

☞ Live as long as you may, the first twenty years form the greater part of your life. They appear so when they are passing; they seem to have been so when we look back to them; and they take up more room in our memory than all the years which succeed them.

☞ Foote being once severely scolded by a lady, he told her, "I have heard of tartar and brimstone; you are the cream of one and the flour of the other."

☞ A wag in New York, standing at the corner of Oliver and Cherry streets, opposite to one of the Catskill ice carts, drew a piece of chalk from his pocket, and marked the letter M before the word ice, which of course made it read thus, "Cats kill Mice."

MISUNDERSTANDING.—One of Governor Slade's female teachers has got into a place out West where the children never heard prayer or preaching. So one day when she commenced her school with a prayer, one of the youngsters went home and reported:

"You never did see such a school-marm! She got down on her knees and swore with all her might!"

☞ Wendell Phillips says "Put an American baby, six months old on his feet, and he will immediately say, 'Mr. Chairman,' and call the next cradle to order!"

Incidents of Travel by River and Rail.

BY FRANCES D. GAGE.

"I say, Mr. Conductor, when will the next express train go out to St Louis?"

"Eleven o'clock and thirty minutes, tonight, sir," was the gentlemanly reply to the rough query.

"Eleven o'clock and thirty minutes!—Go to Texas! Why, it's ten this very minute. I'll bet my boots against a jackknife the morning express is off."

"Yes, sir, it has been gone half an hour."

"Why in natur didn't you get us here sooner? Fourteen hours in Chicago is enough to break a fellow a—— Fourteen hours in Chicago and ——blowing! I've been told th—— regular six-hundred hoss steam—— all the while a running, to blow themselves up with, and pick the pockets of every traveller to pay the firemen and engineers!—Wal, I guess I can stand it; I've a twenty that's never been broke; I think that will put me through. Why didn't you fire up, old brag—give your old hoss another peck of oats. I tell ye, this fourteen hours will knock my calculations into the middle of next week."

"Very sorry, sir—we've done our best; but as we are not clerks of the weather, I hope you will not lay your misfortune to our account. Snow drifts, and the thermometer sixteen below zero, are enemies we can't readily overcome."

"That's so," said the first speaker, with broad emphasis, and a good-natured, forgiving smile. "Fourteen hours in Chicago!"

The stentorian voice, sounding like a trumpet, had aroused every sleeper from elysian dreams into which he might have fallen, after his long, tedious night's travel. Every head was turned, every eye was fixed on the man who had broken the silence. He was standing by the stove, warming his boots. To have warmed his feet through such a mass of cowhide and sole leather, would have been a fourteen hours' operation. Six feet four or five inches he stood in those boots, with shoulders (eased in a fur coat) that looked more like bearing up a world than you will meet, ordinarily, in half a lifetime.—His head Websterian, his shaggy hair black as jet, his whiskers to match, his dark, piercing eye, and his jaws eternally moving, with a rousing quid between them, while a smile of cheerful good humor, notwithstanding his seeming impatience, attracted every one's attention.

"Fourteen hours in Chicago, eh? Wal, I can stand it if the rest can; if twenty dollars won't carry me through, I'll borry of my friends. I've got the things that will bring them. That's so."

And he thrust a hand a little less in size than a common spade, down into the cavernous depths of a broad striped, flashy pair of pants, and brought up that great red hand, full as it could hold, of shining twenty dollar gold pieces.

Don't yer think I can stand these ere Chicagers for one fourteen hours."

A nod of assent from three or four, and a smile of curiosity from the rest, answered his question in the affirmative.

"You must have been in luck, stranger" said an envious looking little man. "You've more than your share of gold."

"I have, eh? Well, I reckon not. I come honestly by it. That's so. And there's them living who can remember this child when he went round the p'rairies trapping p'rrary hens and the like, to get him a night's lodging, or a pair of shoes; to keep the massasaugers from biting my toes; I've hung myself up more nor one night in the timber, to keep out of the ways of the wild varmints; best sleeping in the world, in the crotch of a tree-top! Now, I reckon you wouldn't believe it, but I've gone all winter without a shoe to my foot; and lived on wild game when I could catch it. That's so!"

"Didn't stunt your growth," said a voice near.

"Not a bit of it. It brought me up right. These p'rairies are wonderful roomy. I thought one spell I would let myself out entirely, but me and mother held a corcus, and decided that as she was getting old, and blind like, it tuk too long, and cost too much to sew up the legs of my pantaloons, and so I put a stop to it, and concluded that six foot five wo'd do for a feller that couldn't afford the expensive luxury of a wife to make his breeches. It was only my love for my mother that stopped my growth. If I'd a had an idea of a sewing machine, there is no telling what I might have done."

"You have so many gold pieces in your pocket, you can afford to get your trowsers made now. Why don't you and your mother hold another caucus, and see what you can do? If she would let you expand yourself, you might sell out to Barnum, and make a fortune travelling with Tom Thumb, and take the old woman along."

"Stranger," said the rough, great man, and his whole face loomed up with a mingled expression of pain and pride. "Stranger, I spoke a word here I didn't mean to; a slightly word, like, about my mother. I would give all the gold in my pocket to bring her back for one hour, to look upon this country as it is now. She had her cabin here when Chicago was nowhere; here she raised her boys—she could not give them larnin' but she taught us better things than books can give; to be honest, and industrious. She taught us to be faithful and true; to stand by a friend, and be generous to an enemy.—It's thirty years, stranger, since we dug her grave by the lake side with our own hands; and with many a tear and sob turned ourselves away from the cabin where we'd been raised—the Indians had killed our father long before, and we'd nothing to keep us—and go we went to seek our fortunes. My brother he took down to St. Louis, and got married down there somers; and I just went where the wind blowed, and when I'd scraped money enough together, I cum back and bought a few acres around my mother's old cabin, for the place where I'd lain he bones was sacred, like. Well, in the course of time, it turned up right in the middle of Chicago. I couln't stand that—I loved my old mother too well to let omnibuses rattle over her grave, so I cum back about fifteen years ago; and quietly moved her away to the bury'n ground; and then I went back to Texas, and wrote to an agent arterward to sell my land.—What cost a few hundred to begin on, I sold for over forty thousand—if I'd a kept it till now, 'twould have been worth ten times that: that's so, but I got enough for't. I soon turned that forty thousand into eighty thousand, and that into twice as much, and so on, 'till I don't know nor don't care what I'm worth; that's so. I work hard, am the same rough customer, remember every day of my life what my mother taught me; never drink, nor fight, wish I didn't swear and chaw; but them's got to be kind a second natur like, and the only thing that troubles me is my money—havn't got no wife nor children, and I'm going now to hunt up my brother and his folks. If his boys is clever and industrious, ain't ashamed of my big boots and old-fashioned ways, and his gals is young women and not ladies; if they help their mother and don't put on more than two frocks a day, I'll make 'em rich, every one on 'em.

"Now, gentlemen, 'taint often I'm led to tell on myself after this fashion. But these old places where I trapped when I was a boy, made me feel like a child again and I just felt like telling these young-sters here about the changes and chances a feller may meet in life, if he only tries to make the most of himself.

"But, boys," said he, turning to a party of young men, "there's something better than money. Get education. Why, boys, if I had as much larnin' as money I could be President in 1857 just e a-s-y. Why I could buy up half the North, and not miss it out of my pile. But get larnin'. don't chaw tobacco; don't take to liquor; don't swear, and mind your mother; that's the advice of a real live Sucker; and if you mind what I say you may be men (and it ain't every feller that wears a goatee and breeches that's a man, by a long ways.) Foller out her counsels, never do a thing that will make you ashamed to meet her in heaven. Why, boys, I never done a bad thing but I heard my mother's voice reprovin' me; and I never done a good thing and made a good move, but I've seemed to hear her say, 'That's right, Jack,' and that has been the best of all. Nothin' like a mother, boys; nothin' like a mother—that's so."

All this had passed while waiting to wood, just out of Chicago. The great man was swelling with emotions called up from the dark shadows of the past; his big sought came heaved like a great billow upon the ocean. Tears sprang to his deep-set eyes—they welled up to the brim—and swam round asking to be let fall as tributes to his mother's memory—tributes to the love of the past. But he choked them down, and humming a snatch of an old ballad, he thrust his hands down into his pockets, walked back to the end of the car, pulled the gigantic collar of his shaggy coat up around his ears, buttoned it close, and leaned back against the window in silence.

The cars rattled on. What a mind was there; what a giant intellect, sleeping buried from light and usefulness by a rubbish of prejudice, habit and custom—doing but half work, for want of culture.

"A mute inglorious Milton," or rather Webster, going about the world, struggling with his own soul, yet bound by chains of ignorance, which precluded his doing but a moiety of the good it lay in his power to do.

All the way through our long tedious journey, he had ever been on the watch to do good. He gave up his seat by the fire to an Irish woman and her child, and took one further back; soon a young girl seated herself by his side; as the night hours wore on, and she nodded wearily, he rose, spread his beautiful leopard skin with its soft, rich lining, on the seat, made a pillow of his carpet bag, and insisted that she should lie down and sleep.

"What will you do?" said she, naively.

"Never mind me—I can stand up and sleep like a Buffalo; I'm used to it. That's so!"

A little boy, pulled up from a sound nap to give place to incomers, was pacified and made happy by a handful of chestnuts and a glowing bit of candy from the big man's pocket. When he left the car for refreshment, he brought back his hands full of pies, and distributed them among a weary group. A mother and seven little children, the eldest not twelve years old, whose husband and father left the cars at every stopping place, and returned more stupid and beastly each time, scolding the little tired restless ones with thick tongue, and glaring his furious red eyes upon the poor grieved victim of a wife, like a tiger upon its prey, "because she did not keep her young ones still;" "they would disturb every body." No bits of refreshment, no exhilarating draught, no rest from that fat, cross baby, came to her all the long night, save when the big man stretched out his great hands and took her baby boy for an hour, and let him play with his splendid watch to keep him quiet.

"I'll give yer a thousand dollars for him," said he, as he handed him back to her arms.

"You may have the whole lot for that," answered the drunken father with a swine like grunt.

"It's a bargain,' said the big man, 'providin' the mother's willing.'

'Indade, sir, it's not one of them can be had for money,' was the quiet yet determined response of the mother's heart.

How kindly he helped her off the cars, when, at the break of day, they came to their journey's end.

Thus all night he had been attracting the attention of the waking ones in the cars. But his kindness and rough politeness would soon have been forgotten by the mass of the passengers, had he not stamped it upon our memories with his gold.

'I wonder who he is,' and 'where did he get in?' 'What an interesting character.'

'Education would spoil him.' 'What rich furs!' 'Did you notice what a splendid watch he carries?' 'He's some great man incog.'

Such were a few of the querries that passed from lip to lip. But there came no answer; for he, who alone could have answered, set crouched in his fur coat, coming unconscious of all but his own deep thoughts.

"Chicago!" shouted the Brakeman, and in an instant all was confusion, and our hero was lost in the crowd. The next we saw of him was at the baggage stand looking up a band box for a sweet looking country girl, who was going to learn the milliner's trade in the city. As we passed to our carriage, we discovered him again, holding an old man by the hand, while he grasped the shoulder of the conductor of another train with the other, getting for the deaf, gray-haired sire the right information as to the route he should take to get to 'his darter, who lived near Muscatine, Iowa.'

'God bless him for his good deeds!' was our earnest aspiration, as we whirled round the corner. May his shadow never grow less, or the gold in his pocket diminish for in his unnumbered charities and mercies dropped so unostentatiously here and there, he is perhaps doing more good in his day and generation, than he who donates his thousands to build charitable institutions, to give honor to his own name.

Oh how much the world needs great hearts that are able to comprehend little things—and yet how often it happens that the learned, the wise, and the rich, out-grow the every-day wants of humanity, and feeling within themselves the power to move mightily—pass by the humble duties that would make a thousand hearts leap for joy—and, push on, looking for some wrong to right, some great sorrow to be soothed, some giant work to be accomplished; and failing to find the great work live and die, incarcerated in their selfishness, and do nothing at all.

This rough man's nature seemed the nature of a little child. His quick eye saw at a glance; his great heart warmed, and his great hand executed his little works of charity—so small that one would have expected to see them slip between his giant fingers unaccomplished—yet were they done. The 'angel over the right shoulder' will have a longer column to set down to his account of deeds well done, than all the rest of the passengers of that long, tedious, stormy night, in January, 1856.

Letter to an Absent Wife.

"MY DEAR WIFE—In silence and alone, (boys, don't make such a racket there, if you please, while I'm writing!) in the stillness of my quiet chamber, (Ha! ha! oho! good! what's that?) I sit down to write a few lines to you. (You know how to dress salad, you do!) Although I felt the pang of separation (fill up! fill up!—so thank you;) from your dear self at this moment, yet it is a pleasing reflection to know (What is the state of the game now?) that a few short days will enable me to be again with you, (a cigar Joe,) and once more press your gentle hand in mine. (Oh! I can't take a hand now.) Again I shall leave this city, tiresome indeed in your absence, ('We won't go home till morning—oh! keep still will you?) and every hour of this this interval will be counted [capital (capital story that, Bill!) with anxious solicitude by me. As I sit here alone in the stillness of the night, (Come give us a song!' 'I can't 'pon my word!' 'Oh do!') secluded by myself, my mind is filled with tender recollections, and a lowness of spirit comes over me. (Gaily still the moments roll!) which I endeavor (While I quaff the flowing bowl,) in vain (Care can never reach the soul!) to shake ('Who deeply drinks of wine) off. I now lay down my pen [Bravo! bravo!] for fatigue [one moment boys,] overpowers me.—Adieu, my dear wife, (in a minute; duty before pleasure,) and believe me [I'm with you now, boys!] your affectionate, husband. 'CHARLES.'

LETTER TO AN ABSENT HUSBAND.

'MY DEAR HUBBY:—I received your affectionate letter yesterday. [Do!—don't—be quiet!] and it was truly welcome, [be still! you shant squeeze my hand! [I assure you, dear Charles, you have no idea how lonesome [there, you have made me make a great big blot!] I feel when I am seperated [will you] from you; but the assurance that I shall see you on Saturday [if you attempt such a thing!] is a great comfort. Hook forward to that day with so much pleasure. [Henry if you kiss me again, I'll write to Charles!] for you know it is delightful [there you've broken my bracelet!] delightful [you've made me write delightful twice] to live in hopes. [It's to late to take a ride isn't it?] I could not but feel pity for you when you spoke of being alone in the stillness of your chamber. It seemed as if I could see you my dear Hubby, [a-ch! do be-have, will you] as you were writing to your faithful little wife. I too am alone ['I'm telling a great story now!] and thinking of the days that still intervene between now and Saturday. [Not another for the——a-c h!] The country looks beautiful, [it would be nice to take a short ride to the beach.] but I never enjoy it while you are absent. [I declare there are the horses are at the door!] I have but a few minutes to conclude in [tell Jane to bring my bonnet] as the mail closes [and my shirt] in a few minutes. Adieu, my dear [well, I am glad you have stuck yourself wit a pin!] Hubby!

'Faithfully yours, MARY.'

A WONDERFUL MAN.—At a recent meeting of the French Academy, M. Elie de Beaumont announced his wish to lay before the savans there congregated a series of discoveries, which, if he will only make good his promises, might lead us to hope that so ingenious a gentlemen could even discover the perpetual motion. The novelties he announces to the Academy compromise—a method of reproducing animal life, a complete solution of the the problem of aerial navigation, a project for a universal language, and the discovery of the cause and nature of, and an infallible cure for, cholera.

Life's Lessons

I asked a thing that would not wait
And long pursued it in vain,
Again a brother met and spake
So he might be forgiven.
Would grant his heart and reverence,
Unbidden strange surrendering;
Would to the giant his fellow-men
The olive branch extending.

I did not know, I dreamed not then,
That moment's fatal lesson,
Could ne'er unbind, and blind the soul
To any under Heaven.
That he would dare to bow to God,
That prayer to him addressing,
While hate and envy filled his heart,
All holier thoughts repressing.

I used to think, that he who bowed,
Before God's holy altar,
And vowed through Christ, the crucified,
With steps that should not falter,
To tread the path His footsteps trod,
Unmindful of earth's pleasures,
Could e'er forget the solemn vow,
For love of earthly treasures.

I did not know, I dreamed not then,
That at that altar often,
How men, whose hearts no widow's tear,
Nor orphan's cry can soften,
Who heap up piles of glittering wealth
On hearts all crushed and bleeding,
Who seek the flowery paths, nor heed
That Christ's through thorns is leading.

I used to think, that he who clothed
His brow with constant smiling,
Forevermore the path of life
With song and jest beguiling,
Must ever nourish in his heart
A fount of joy unfailing:
I deemed the pleasant smile and word
Were but the heart's unveiling.

I did not know, I dreamed not then,
How often smiles are hiding
The darkest most despairing woe,
Deep in the soul abiding—
Nor how the playful word and jest
That on the lip are trembling,
Are oft assumed, so best to aid
The stricken heart's dissembling.

I used to think that he whose brow
The night of sorrow shaded,
And from whose earthly faith each ray
Of light and joy had faded:—
Must surely bear within his breast
A heart all seared and blighted,
Which nevermore, in its deep gloom,
Could by hope's beam be lighted.

I did not know, I could not dream,
How Faith can rise victorious,
In sorrow's dark and blinding storm,
And hail the rainbow glorious:—
Nor how the Father's chastening rod
His hand of love disclosing,
Can gladden our grief darkened hearts
While on that love reposing.

How could I know, how could I dream,
Ere Time had taught the lesson,
That puny man could dare insult
His God with false profession,
Or that the seeming merry smile
Could be but idle feigning,
And grief be turned to truest joy
By grace of God sustaining

TECUMSEH, Sept. 26th. A. H.

Persons sentenced Tuesday.

The following persons were sentenced yesterday by Judge Wilson, Austin E. Gillet, arraigned for contempt of Court for escaping from officers when under arrest as witness in the Sigler child abandonment case of last term, when Sigler was on trial for murder.

Judge Wilson sentenced Gillet to pay a fine of $250, and be imprisoned in County jail 30 days.

Alanson Harvey, convicted of grand larceny, for stealing ox and selling to butchers, sentenced to Jackson 3 years.

Henry Smith colored man, convicted as a common theif, sentenced 5 years. He looked rather chicken-hearted as he received his sentence. We have no doubt he was convicted by fowl means.

Charles Murphy, convicted of assault upon his wife, sentenced to pay a fine of $100, be imprisoned in the County jail for 6 months and bail in two sureities of $500 to keep the peace for 2 years.

Lorenzo Clark, passing counterfeit money, 5 years at Jackson.

Wm. Odell; stealing watch 5 years.

Press Convention.

We publish this week the call for a Convention of the Press of this State, to be held at this place on the 8th proximo with the names of such of our associates as have authorized us to do so, or have expressed a preference for this place.—While we thank our friends for their partiality to our city, we will assure them we should have been equally pleased to have met them at any other point. It is proper to state that the call for Jackson, did not originate with either of our editors or publishers and we only took an active part in the matter after having been requested to do so by a goodly number of our cotemporaries. However, we shall be extremely happy to see all our associate editors and publishers, and can promise them that every possible arrangement which can add to the pleasure and comfort of the gathering will be made and freely tendered by the "Jackson Press." Our friends of the Hotels, we can promise will be most happy to greet you all, and make you comfortable and contented.—TIFFANY, of the Exchange, has already the reputation of "a prince of landlords" among the fraternity, justly earned, and well maintained. Our old friend D B HIBBARD of the new Hibbard house, is also prepared and anxious to see his old friends at his hotel as well as in splendid coaches. JO PEIRCE of the American is well supplied with good rooms, good victuals, and a stock of good new stories which cannot fail to please all who call upon him. As our County Fair will be in operation, an hour can be spent in viewing the people and productions of our county, we predict, with profit. All will wish to visit the State Penitentiary and take a peep, perhaps, at an old friend or two, as well as to witness the practical operations of this mammoth work shop.—But above all else, let all come, determined to join his fellows, of whatever name or party, in a hearty and thorough effort to combine our interests, and devise some means to relieve the press of Michigan from the load of imposition and neglect under which it has so long suffered. The object is a worthy one, and if the attempt is harmoniously made and generally persisted in, it cannot fail of ultimate success.—Jackson Citizen.

Chatauque Co. Bank.

A few weeks ago we published a list of Broken or Discredited Banks, taken from the Adrian Watch Tower and which at the time we supposed to be correct, in which the above was included. We have since received a line from the Cashier stating, what we also learn from other sources to be the fact, that this Bank has never ceased redeeming promptly at its counter, nor does it intend to, nor is it in any sense discredited at home, nor abroad, among those who know anything of its conditions or affairs. We are also informed that there are no less than fifteen others included in the same Watch Tower and Free Press list standing precisely in the same condition.

Now we must confess, that in this matter, we feel somewhat sold, and scarcely know whether we do our readers the greater service by publishing or withholding a list upon which so little reliance can be placed, and which was so evidently made up for other purposes than the conveyance of reliable and truthful intelligence, or a proper and necessary caution. We notice also that the Watch Tower was the first to put our Tecumseh Bank upon its discredited lists, so that it is now published as broken in half of the papers in the State, while the fact is that its doors have hitherto remained, and no one here doubts will continue to remain unclosed for the redemption of any paper that may be held against it. In the present crisis of monetary affairs, it seems to us, that those who for partizan or other purposes, are willing to put into circulation unfounded rumors of broken or suspended banks, thus seeking to increase rather than allay that trepidation and alarm which so surely, precipitates the evil which it fears, do the community no less than the institutions which they libel, a serious an' most dangerous injury, and should not be suffered by either to pass without rebuke.

The Pressure in New York.

The Herald gives the following account of the existing pressure in New York:

"Who would think that the husbands of those ladies who wear thousand dollar dresses and wipe their "dear" little noses with hundred dollar pocket handkerchiefs were shining about Wall Street, borrowing money at three per cent a month, or pulling a long face, and telling their creditors that they have not a cent in the world!

"The pressure next extends to the theatres the opera, and all places of public amusement, which are nightly crowded, the faces of a majority of the audiences being unfamiliar to the habitues. The months of September and October make the most pleasant season in New York, and the loungers are enjoying it to the full. There is no panic among them, except a nervous anxiety caused by fear, that some one will spend more money and make more show than they do — Det. Advertiser.

BANK OF TECUMSEH AND WAKEFIELD BANK.—We are informed that the Bank of Tecumseh has been paying out large amounts of Wakefield Bank paper. The latter concern will be found among the "Broken and Discredited?" in all the recent lists. The question will naturally recur; had the Bank of Tecumseh any financial connection with the Wakefield Bank; if so, will the failure of the latter hasten the downfall of the former? Those holding Tecumseh bills, will do well to send them home, while that concern pays in dimes and half dimes. Even that resource may fail ere long. Be prudent in time.—Adrian Watch Tower.

The citizens of Tecumseh will be happy to learn, that their Bank is able to pay DIMES and half DIMES. Much better do this, than adopt the plan of a Bank called Erie & Kalamazoo. Adrian Brokers are known to be shrewd, but, there are whole families in Lenawee county, at the present time, who are allowed to know a thing or two yet.

WHEELING, Sept 26.

At a meeting of the citizens of this city held this evening, it was unanimously resolved that the banks of the city be requested to suspend specie payment, until the buisness interests of the community would justify a redemption. This action was in consequence of the heavy run made upon them, recently, by foreign brokers and bankers. The bankers are abundantly able to meet their liabilities and no loss will be sustained by note holders or depositors in consequence of the suspension.

PITTSBURG, Sept 26.

There is no concert of action amongst the Banks of Pittsburg in regard to future policy. All of them continue to pay coin for small demands. The Merchants & Manufacturers Exchange Bank and the Citizen's Bank are paying small demands made by laborers, operatives, and others but refuse the demands of banks and brokers. The Bank of Pittsburg has resolved to pay in full.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 26.

The Farmers & Mechanics Bank is cashing all its notes and it is paying checks in notes on other banks. All other banks are fully suspended, but still, they are furnishing their customers with change. The excitement has subsided. The issue of shin plasters is talked of and may be resorted to.

More About The Central America.

The Empire City reached Quarantine yesterday at 7½ A. M., and after a temporary detention, arrived at the pier, foot of Warren street about 10 A. M. Immediately her arrival became known, hundreds of excited people rushed to the spot, eager to learn from those on board the fate of relatives and friends. With commendatory zeal the Company at once exerted themselves to place the shipwrecked sufferers in comfortable quarters, and with that design the whole party, or at least, such of them as had no friends in the City with whom they could take shelter, were conveyed in carriages to the New York Hotel. We are proud to record an act on the part of the hackmen whose carriages were thus employed. They all refused to receive pay for the hire of their carriages. We are sorry to record a very dissimilar act on the part of the proprietors of the New York Hotel. On arriving there the purser had an interview with the party or parties in charge of the office, and was informed that none of the unfortunate passengers of the Central America could be admitted the hotel being nearly full. Among the shipwrecked people thus turned from the doors of the New York Hotel, were seven ladies and two children. These were immediately driven to the Metropolitan Hotel, where they were cordially received by Messrs. Leland, and the wardrobe of Mrs Warren Leland, and of several of the lady boarders placed at their disposal. Everything that could be done for alleviating the sadness of their condition was at once accomplished.

At the Astor House, Mr. Stetson, who left the hotel before the arrival of the Empire City; gave directions to the clerk in charge of the office, that in the event of their seeking accommodation there, they were to be instantly taken to good rooms, and their comfort amply provided for — One lady who repaired thither, whose health was considerably shattered by the trials she had undergone, was nursed by Mrs. Stetson herself. At the St. Nicholas also, Mr. Coleman was prepared to render every assistance to these unfortunate people, and to place at their disposal the best accommodation his vast hotel co'd afford.

The male passengers were afterwards distributed at various hotels, several repairing to Lovejoy's, others to the Miner's Arms, in Front street, and others to private houses. Those staying at the hotels were objects of the greatest curiosity and sympathy during the day.

THE NIGHT ON THE WAVES—THRILLING SCENES.

Not the least interesting feature in the narrative of this terrible catastrophe, is the description of the night passed on the bosom of the waves by those who were ultimately rescued by the bark Ellen — Mr George, a most intelligent passenger, has given us a thrilling account of the fearful scene. He was one of the hundreds who had supplied themselves with life-preservers, pieces of plank, &c., and preferred to await the ship's going down to leaping overboard in anticipation of her fate. When she went down stern foremost, after giving three lurches that made every timber quiver, and which were to every quaking heart as the thross that instantly preceded her dis-olution, he was dragged with the rest on board of her some twenty or twenty-five feet beneath the surface. He heard no shriek, nothing but the seething rush and hiss of waters that closed above her as she hurried, almost with the speed of an arrow, to her ocean bed. Night had closed in before the vessel sank, and he was sucked in by the whirlpool caused by her swift descent, to a depth that in its seeming was unfathomable, and into a darkness that he had never dreamed of — Compared with it, the blackest night, without moon or star, was as the broad noon day. He was rather stunned than stifled, and his sensations on coming to the surface were almost as painful, from their reaction, as those which he endured at the greatest depth to which he sank. When he became conscious, after the lapse of a minute or two, he could distinguish every object around him for a considerable distance. The waves as they rose and fell, revealed a crowd of human heads. Those unfortunates who had lost their life preservers or planks while under water, owing to the force of the whirpool, were frantically snatching at the broken pieces of the wreck, which, breaking from the ship as she continued to descend, leapt above the surface, and fell back with a heavy splash. Their cries arose, that mingled into one inarticulate wail, and then the lustier and less terrified shouted for assistance to the bark Marine, which was far beyond hailing distance. The waves dashed them one against another, at first, but speedily they began to separate, and the last farewells were taken. One man called to another, in our informant's hearing, 'If you are saved, FRANK, send my love to my dear wife,' but the friend appealed to, answered only with a gurgle of the throat. He was washed off his plank, and perished as his companion spoke. Many were desirous of separating themselves as far as possible from the rest, being fearful lest some desperate struggler might seize hold of them and draw them under. Others, afraid of their loneliness, called to their neighbors to keep together. Generally, they strove to cheer each other as long as they remained within hearing, and when the roar of the waves drowned all but the loudest shouting, the call of friendship, or the cry of despair, was heard in the distance, and infused confidence, or increased dismay, in many a failing bosom.

It was when he had drifted far from the companionship of any of his fellows in misfortune, that Mr. George began to realize his situation. The night was quite dark. Occasionally, as the driving clouds parted and gave a glimpse of sky, a star or two would be visible, but this was very seldom and offered but the faintest gleam of hope that the morning would dawn fair and calm. The swell of the sea was great, and successively the poor floaters, holding on to their planks with the energy of despair, were siding on the brink of a precipice and buried in a valley of water. Our informant, like many of the rest, was seized with the fear of sharks. Respiration was very difficult, owing to the mass of water which were constantly dashed upon them, as wave after wave rolled by. For two or three hours the water was not unpleasantly cold, and it was not till about 1 o'clock on the morning of Sunday, when they had been nearly five hours in the water, and a fresh, chilling wind arose, that their limbs began to feel benumbed.

Some of the incidents described to us as occurring before or about that time were truly thrilling. One man, floating in solitude, and terrified at his loneliness, after shouting himself hoarse to find a companion, saw at length a man with two life preservers fastened about his body drifting towards him. His heart leapt with joy at the welcome sight, for the feeling of desolation which had overcome him was terrible to endure. He called to the other to join him, if possible, and made every exertion to meet him half way. There was no reply, but the other drifted nearer and nearer. A wave threw them together. They touched. The living man shrieked in the face of a corpse. The other had been drowned by the dash of the billows, or had perished from exhaustion.

When, rising and falling with the swell of the waves, the lights of the bark Ellen were first discerned by the survivors in the water, the thrill of hope that at once filled every breast amounted, it may well be believed, to a perfect ecstasy. Let Mr. George speak for all. He says: "I never felt so thankful in all my life. I never knew what gratitude was before.—I do not know whether I cried or not, but I know I was astonished to hear my own laughter ringing in my ears. I do not know why I laughed. That verse, "God moves in a mysterious way," kept passing in and out of me—through me, rather, as if I had been the pipe of an organ. It did not come to me by my own volition, but somehow made me remember it.—When the lights approached nearer, a score of voices sprang up around me, crying "Ship ahoy," "Boat ahoy," and then I began to shout too. And I had never any doubt that I should be saved, till I saw the lights pass by, about half a mile from where I was, and recede in the distance. Then I began to give myself up for lost indeed. But I slowly drifted toward her again, till I could make out her hull and one of her masts, and presently I floated close to her, and shouted, and was taken up. When I got on to the deck I could not stand. I did not know till then how exhausted I was.

Our informant, before he was thus happily rescued, encountered six men clinging to a log of wood, two of whom were washed off in his sight, within a short distance of the bark. The others must have afterwards shared the same fate, as they were not taken on board the bark and were never again seen.

Psychologists probably will be able to account for one fact that has come to our knowledge, connected with this night of terror. We heard a passenger describe his sensations in this wise: "I guess I had been about four hours in the water, and had floated away from the rest; when the waves ceased to make any noise, and I heard my mother say, JOHNNY, did you eat sister's grapes?' I hadn't thought of it for twenty years at least. It had gone clean out of my mind. I had a sister that died of consumption more than thirty years ago, and when she was sick—I was a boy of eleven or so—a neighbor had sent her some early hot-house grapes.—Well, those grapes were left in a room where I was, and —I ought to have been skinned alive for it little rascal that I was —I devoured them all. Mother came to me after I had gone to bed, when she couldn't find the fruit for sister to moisten her mouth with in the night, and said, 'JOHNNY, did you eat sister's grapes?'—I did not add to the meanness of my conduct by telling a lie. I owned up, and my mother went away in tears, but without flogging me. It occasioned me a qualm of conscience for many a year after; but, as I said, for twenty years at least I had not thought of it, till when I was floating about benumbed with cold I heard it as plain as ever I heard her voice in my life—I heard mother say 'Johnny, did you eat sister's grapes?' I don't know how to account for it. It did not scare me tho'. I thought it was a presage of my death.

Of men placed in extraordinary positions of peril we instinctively desire to know the sensations, thoughts, all the mental, all the physical phenomena. We try to imagine how the man feels who is to be hung in the morning—how the man felt who went over the American Falls at Niagara, a year or two ago, who was clinging all day to the root of a tree, with his awful fate staring him in the face.—So it is a part of our nature to be curious respecting the feelings of men situated as these men were, tossed for hours on a stormy sea, certain to perish before long of hunger, if not of cold, exhaustion or drowning, unless picked up by some passing vessel.

We questioned nearly all the passengers of the Central America who arrived yesterday by the Empire City, and received various replies. We found no one who would confess to a dread of death per se. One thought of his family, his friends, and struggled for life for their sakes. Another wished to live that he might enjoy the treasure which he had stowed away on his person, and which would be saved if he was. A third, who had lost everything, wanted to begin life anew, and make his fortune over again. A species of fatalism consoled some. If their time was come it was come, and they saw their comrades in misfortune fail in their last struggle and sink, with scarcely a pang. One man told us he went to sleep in the water.

Of the hundreds who rose to the surface after the steamer sank, only those who were rescued by the Ellen,—forty nine in number,—seem to have survived the horrors of that awful night. Many who imagined they had securely fastened their life-preservers about them, found after having been sucked down by the whirpool created by the sinking ship, that not only the life preservers, but their own clothes were torn from them. And without some support, there was no living in that fearful sea. The ablest swimmer could not have breasted those waves more than a minute. And those who retained their life preservers, and those who seized on planks and other portions of the wreck, were not, it must be supposed, in more than three hundred instances able to survive the next few hours, amid the surging of the waves, the driving of the wind, and the chill of the water. On Tuesday morning, when daylight broke, very few could be seen, who, of course, were immediately rescued, but though the Ellen cruised about for several hours, no more were to be found. A few were saved, the sea claimed all the rest.

It will be seen that in one or two instances no first premium has been awarded, the award having been thrown out, by the Executive Committee, in consequence of the same article having drawn the first premium the year previous, or of some other defect or irregularity, in which case the second award has been left to stand as awarded by the Judges.

The committee of Arrangements also tender their thanks to the citizens of the village of Tecumseh, for their liberality in defraying the expenses of erecting the necessary buildings and preparing the grounds for the late Fair, without charge to the Society.

B. L. BAXTER, Secretary.
M. A. PATTERSON President.

NEW YORK, Sept. 26.

Our money market is in a very excited state in consequence of the gloomy advices from the South. The advices of the suspension at Baltimore, Washington and Philadelphia caused much surprise, and it was generally believed that the first disastrous news would come from the East; but the market continued firm, and there is no sign of weakness from any one of our banks. The advices from Boston received at noon were as unexpected as cheering. It is believed our banks have passed the crisis, and the market closed with a quieter feeling. There were rumors of several failures but nothing definite. Our exchange brokers were at a stand, as to their business, and generally declined to fix a rate. There was one offer to sell Philadelphia funds at 1 per cent discount. At the first board of the stock market there was quite a panic and stocks fell rapidly. At the second there was a still further decline. Missouri sixes fell off 5½, at which price, however, all offering was taken.

BOSTON, Sept 26.

The money market presents little variation from the rates ruling during the week. The net gain of coin in the banks for the week, is a little short of 400,000. The banks are considered stronger than two weeks ago; and are believed generally to be in a healthier condition. Bills of the Hopkington bank, Westerly R. R., was refused at the Suffolk.

TRENTON, N. J. Sept 26.

Our banks had a steady but moderate run to-day, and paid out above $8,000 in specie each, they are in a very good condition and it is thought will weather the storm.

Jas. T. Sterling, our heaviest merchant has assigned. His ass ts are ample.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept 26

A meeting of the Presidents was held this P. M., but it is reported that, for want of action, they adjourned without arriving at any determination. It was thought they would determine on a full suspension, as practiced by some of the banks to day, but which was not general on account of the North America. The mechanics and some of the other banks are receiving a supply of specie. There was also a meeting of the cashiers of the various banks, but their action is not yet known. It is understood an application will be made to the Governor, for the call of an extra session of the Legislature, with a view of offering relief to the bankers from the penalty of charters imposed by the Law of 1850. Several of the banks however, are not acting under this law, including the Pennsylvania, formerly the Mechanics Philadelphia and Western,

WASHINGTON, Sept. 26.

The Bank of Metropolis closed firm.—The commercial community is generally satisfied with the course of the other banks. All are confident of their stability and resumption at an early day. A considerable amount of deposits have been made in the Patriotic Bank of Washington, since their suspension.

BOSTON, Sept. 26.

Jno. S. Thayor banker, Boston died yesterday.

CINCINNATI, Sept 26.

Rates of exchange are nominal. Sight checks cannot be bought on New York, at less than five per cent premium. Gold is held out of the market. No failures. The merchants all stand firm.

For the Tecumseh Herald.

OBITUARY.

It is with much pain that we undertake to record the sad news that have reached us from Toledo, Ohio, of the sudden death of our friend MR. WM GILCHRIST of that place, on Thursday the 17th inst., caused by falling from the 3d tier of joists on a brick building in progress of erection, through an opening in the joist below, a distance of about 40 feet, and striking on the under floor, producing death almost instantly. This is a most painful calamity to an interesting wife and four children who are left to mourn their sudden loss, and will send a pang to the heart of a large circle of friends in this country, as well as to the land of his nativity.

Mr. G. was long and favorably known as a citizen of Tecumseh. He was a native of Fifeshire, Scotland, from which place he immigrated to this country about 21 years ago, and soon afterwards settled in this village, then only in embryo. He brought with him from his native hills, a healthy and vigorous constitution, to which was added a mind well stored with useful knowledge and mechanical skill—he, with a strong arm and willing heart put his shoulder to the wheel and manfully united with the early settlers in cultivating, improving, and building up, our now beautiful village; and in raising the eye from where we now write, it will rest on many specimens of hi industry which will long stand as a memento of WM. GILCHRIST. Con.

DIED—In this city on Sabbath morning, Sept. 20, CARRIE, second daughter of George and Mary Jane KELLOGG, aged 13 years.

Thus has passed away a flower too lovely for earth, God has taken her to bloom in the Celestial Paradise. It was hard to give her up; for she was dear to us as to parents, brother, sisters, teachers and school mates, yet we trust that her early piety, her consistent christian life, her triumphant death, may be the means of reaching us, and especially the young, to be also ready for the coming of the Son of Man. Never in our experience, have we been called upon to record the death of one so universally beloved. At home she was the life and joy of the household, kind and gentle to all she well deserved the title she so often received, the Peace-maker. At school she was remarkably faithful and conscientious in the discharge of her duties. She took a deep interest in the spiritual welfare of her associates, and all who came under her influence.

She was a member of the Sabbath School to which she was greatly attached. She gave utterance to her love for it by singing on her death bed, the words

Gracious news and merciful,
How we love the Sabbath School.

A few hours before her death she sung the hymn ending "ready all may be found."—and then sent with great solemnity, "are we all ready?" God grant that we may all live and thus be ready. Her funeral was attended on Monday at the Congregational church by a large and sympathising audience of parents, and teachers, and children connected with the Sabbath and day schools. A discourse was preached by the pastor Rev. A. Mahan, on Early Piety in which the individual was represented as an instance worthy of imitation.—JACKSON CITIZEN. E. L. B.

Is Coming.

Dr. ENTRIKIN, late of the Ohio Lung Infirmary and Surgical Institute, and who has recently established an office in Adrian, Michigan under the charge of Dr. Turner, M. D., late of the Starling Medical College will arrive at the Michigan House, Tecumseh, Monday morning, Oct 5th, and remain 3 days; manchester, Thursday, 8th and remain 2 days.

He treats the diseases of the Throat and Lungs by the systematic use of medicated Vapors with astonishing effect, as has been proved by hundreds of living witnesses throughout the West as well as in the East; that really does cure Consumption admits of no doubt. Go and see him and learn the nature of your disease; this alone may repay your trouble, as he charges nothing for consultation at his room. If any one has cataract, Cross Eyes, or any other disease or deformity susceptible of surgical aid, now is the time to seek relief when it is brought home to you, as the Dr. pays special attention to Surgery, and diseases of the Eye and Ear.

MICHIGAN STATE FAIR.—As the State Fair is now in progress in Detroit, and the Editor is in attendance upon it, you will be so good as to charge any oversight or defect in this issue to his absence.

VISITORS IN TOWN.—Wm. H. Wood Esq. and Lady (Minnie Mary Lee,) of Sauk Rapids, Minnesota—David Bills Esq. and Lady, of Vermont, and Charles Guion Esq and Lady recently of Brooklyn N. Y. left town on Monday last from a recent visit to this place.

UNION SCHOOL—FEMALE PRECEPTRESS.—Miss Mary E Parsons, recently of Lyons N. Y., has been engaged by the Board as first preceptress of the Female Department of our Union School and has now entered upon its duties, thus rendering complete, in our high school arrangements facilities for study not surpassed by any Institution of the kind in the State.

LENAWEE COUNTY FAIR.—Our readers and citizens will bear in mind that next Wednesday and Thursday, Oct 7th and 8th is the time of our County Fair—and also that those desiring to do so can at that time go and return upon the Rail Road at half fare. As the annual address, on Thursday, this year devolves upon one with whom you all are sufficiently familiar, you will not expect of us to do more than simply to allude to it

ANNUAL SCHOOL MEETING.—Owing to the sudden, but we hope temporary illness of C. A. Stacy Esq moderator of the Board, the annual school meeting of Monday evening last was adjourned to Monday evening next at 7½ o'clock, at Union Hall, when all interested in the cause are requested promptly to attend.

PUBLIC GROUNDS.—We notice that our village Board are putting up a substantial, and at the same time very pretty fence around Military Square, which at the same time corresponding with that placed by the School Board, about the School House square, directly opposite, will when painted, be quite an addition to that portion of our village.

☞ A Cotillion Party is to come off at the well known hotel of S. Walker, in Cambridge, on Wednesday October 14th. Good music. Bill Two Dollars. There will also be a dance at the Michigan House, in this village to-morrow evening.

☞ The Village Board are compelled to build a new bridge at the old Tannery. We hope the new one will compare with the other improvements, if so, it will probably last more than four years.

☞ We publish the list of Premiums on account of not being able to supply the demand last week.

☞ Jones & Scherer have received Scot's Winter Fashions. We notice a new style of coats for ladies, which we think very appropriate. Those wishing fashionable clothing will do well to give them a call.

☞ J. B Hampton, of Franklin, left with us a bottle of syrup made from sugar cane. It has a pleasant flavor, and in our opinion is preferable to the majority of Molasses now sold in our village. Mr. H has given the sugar cane a fair trial and says that it will yield 80 gallons of syrup to the acre.

We were also presented with a ½bushel of fine mercer potatoes by Mr. H for which please receive our thanks. They are the nicest we have seen, the weight of one being 2½ lbs.

☞ The potatoe rot, in this vicinity we are happy to state, is entirely confined to the mercer species, all the others are perfectly sound.

REMOVAL.—The Millinery rooms of Mrs Henry are removed to her residence one door west of Taylor & Co's. Drug Store, where she will be happy to see her friends.

TECUMSEH BANK.—The Free Press says that this Bank did not redeem,—the same is untrue; it has never failed to pay a specie and we believe it to be a safe bank.—Jonesville Independant.

☞ Charles DeMott is receiving his fall goods. The stock comprises a little everything. See Advertisement.

☞ We received a letter from "Alf Howard" too late for publication, stating he would be here the last of this week. He gives a concert at Coldwater on Monday next. Look out for his bills

A FEW WORDS ON THE RATIONAL TREATMENT, without Medicine, of Spermatorrhea or Local Weakness, Nocturnal Emissions, Genital and Nervous Debility, Premture Decay of the System, Impotency, and Impediments to Marriage generally, by B. DE LANEY, M D.

The important fact that the many alarming complaints originating in the imprudence and solitude of youth, may be easily removed WITHOUT MEDICINE, is in this small tract clearly demonstrated; and the entirely new and highly successful treatment, as adopted by the Author, fully explained, by means of which every one is enabled to cure HIMSELF perfectly and at the least possible cost, thereby avoiding all the advertised nostrums of the day.

Sent to any address, gratis and post free in a sealed envelope, by remitting two postage stamps to Dr. B. DE LANEY, 17 Lispenard Street, New York.

Dr. Baumback in his travels on the cape of Good Hope says: I found very frequently among the Dutch Boors of the back country, AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which they keep hung up by a throng around the neck of the bottle to a peg over their hammocks. Indeed this seems to be their sole protection against the throat and lung disorders which are quite prevalent among them. I thought it a speaking comment on the practical genius of the American people, that they should furnish the staple, I believe the only remedy this people buy to use. Asking if they used the same manufacturers Pills, they told me that better purgatives grew all around them than any one could prepare.

Who that is troubled with any of those disagreeable Complaints, such as Jaundice, Dyspepsia or Liver Disease of any kind, but would like to know of a remedy for these unseemingly visitations! We feel that we are doing our invalid readers an invaluable service, if we can induce them to get a bottle of Dr. Sanfords Invigorator, and take it, for we know from personal experience that it is one of the greatest remedies for general debility, and consequent inactive bodily powers ever before used. Its action is so perfect and complete as to give relief the first time taken, and if it does to others as it has to us, half a bottle will be all that is needed. We know of nothing we can recommend, with such confidence, as a family medicine, as the Invigorator.

We were shown samples of a new style of Pocket Book, which was invented by D C. Smith of this place, who is the Patentee. This book will destroy the pick-pocket business. It is so constructed as to fasten at the option of the owner, to any portion of his pockets, and cannot be removed without warning the owner. This valuable book will command the attention of the public at large and will find a ready sale. It has long been needed by travelers who have valuable papers to carry.—

We understand, Mr. Smith has a contract with the manufacturers, and will soon be able to supply the demand.—Money is hard to get, but if once in D. C. Smith's pocket book, we venture to say, nothing but a good debt can get it out. The quality of the books are excellent, and the price not above the price of common Pocket Books.

NOTICE

I have tried during Nineteen Years of my life the various modes of doing business

Firstly for Cash.
Secondly on Short Credit.
Thirdly, had to take Long Credit, Orders and Accounts.

Lastly, I have been compelled to wait for payment of Goods sold on Six Months time, long enough for a man to visit California, get rich, and return, before payment could be forced or coaxed.

Now I wish to say, to my numerous friends and patrons, that I am thoroughly convinced that the mode of buying goods on time is both injurious to the buyer and seller.

I will hereafter Sell for Ready pay, at such prices that will defy all competion in this Town, State, or the United States.

No one should buy a dollars worth of Goods without calling at the

Great Western Cash Store,

and get the prices. Some are so unfortunate as to be compelled to trade at long credit stores—to those I would say, Call and See what you can save by having the Ready or something as good, to use where you please.

Training Colts.

Professional horse breakers generally use brute force in making horses gentle and tractable, but this system of subduing animals is not invisible.—It is better to effect the desired result through kind, and gentle means.—Young colts may be broken to the saddle or harness long before they are able to endure labor. The first operation is to put on a halter. The colt will resist pull, of course, but hold fast with a strong arm, in as gentle a manner as possible, and in a few minutes resistance will be at an end. You can then lead the animal wherever you please. This primary step in breaking a colt may be taken when the beast is quite young—from two months to two years old.

The halter should be put on as often as one can spare time, and the colt led about in a gentle manner. A little fondling while the halter is on, with a mouthful or two of food, that colts relish, given to the animal, will aid in creating confidence in you.—After a while a sack may be laid upon the colt's back, while he is led about the yard; and after a few trainings in this manner, something may be put in the bag to make a little weight upon his back. Then a saddle may be placed upon him and a bridle put on; but on no account use any harshness, nor allow the animals to frustrate your designs. At the age of two years the boys may ride him a little, while the master is present to see that nothing done to frighten the colt, or other wise misuse him. Soon after this the harness may be put on, and he may be attached to the fore wheels of a wagon, with shafts so long, that if he happen to kick up, his heels will not come in contact with the whiffle tree. After becoming thoroughly used to drawing these wheels, they may be loaded with a few sacks of grain, and you may try your colt upon the road and see how he goes up hill. If he refuses to draw on rising the hill, use no severity, nor great urging; as it is better to unload him, and let him go up with the bare wheels, or to return home, than to use the least harshness in your management.

All that is needed to make a very gentle animal, and one that will never flinch in labor, is to treat him kindly and never allow any person to manage him, unless he is perfectly qualified to accordance with the above suggestions.

Never Whitewash Trees.

The orchardist should set his face like a flint against all sorts of compositions that leave a coating upon the bark, no matter what they are or what is claimed for them by charlatans or empirics. The arboriculturist of Boston Common made a sad mistake in coating those trees with some sort of composition, of the consistency of paint. The objection to this treatment is, that it interferes with the functions of the epidermis But, say the users of these compositions, they are necessary for the destruction of insects. As well might they advocate the whitewashing of men, women and children, when infested with insects of the genus Pediculus, in order to get rid of them, as that of painting or whitewashing fruit or ornamental trees to rid them of aphides, habitants of their bark or outer covering. The trees grow and seem to flourish, not withstanding this treatment, not because of it—it is no more evidence in favor of it—than the fact that some persons, who seldom or never bathe, yet enjoy good health, is against bathing and surfaces cleanliness in general. There is no danger of keeping fruit trees too clean, and this can be done with pure soft water, or if a little soap be mixed with it, it may cause no harm. A good and the safest wash for trees is pure water.

The tree or plant is enveloped with an epidermis like animal; and for any one to say that this has no function to perform beyond that of covering the organism animated with life as the envelope does the letter, is to publish his ignorance of vegetable physiology. The condition of the coverings of the animal is deemed somewhat essential to the state or condition of the animal—so of the tree, its bark or covering is indicative of the vigor of the tree, or of its opposite condition. Any one at all acquainted with fruit trees, whether from a knowledge of long cultivation or of observation, is prepared to judge of the condition of an orchard, or garden of fruit or other trees, by looking at the condition of the bark.—New England Farmer Aug 15.

To choose a good Milch Cow.

Select from a good breed. We prefer the Devons—bright bay red. The Durhams are roan, red, white and mixtures of these colors. Ayreshire cows are generally red and white spotted. Herefords red or darker colored, with white faces.—Alderneys, pale red and mixed with white. These are the principal colors of the several breeds of which the Durhams are the largest and Alderneys the smallest. Different individuals will contend for each breed being the best and only one that should be selected for their milking qualities. Our animals of each breed, and guess of them often prove remarkable milkers and scale some of the native stock of the country. Two families of cows, one owned by Col. J. Ipus of Ten Hills Farm near Charlestown, Mass., and one owned by Maj John Jones of Wheatland Farm near Middletown Delaware, were called the native breed.

If we were about selecting a milch cow we would endeavor to get one out of such a herd of good milkers; one with a soft velvety feeling skin, slim neck, fine legs broad stern with what is called a large escutcheon that is the hair of the stern pointing inward; a large udder, slim teats and large veins commonly called milk veins, on the belly. Above all things select your cow of a gentle, pleasant countenance, because a first rate milker may be so vicious as to be worthless. Do not look for flesh, as the best cows are seldom fat, their big bones are often very prominent and they have the appearance of being low in flesh. A beefy cow is selected as a good milker.

The next thing is, what is a good milker? That is how much milk must she yield per day? A cow that will average five quarts of milk per day through the year, making 1,825 quarts is an extraordinary good cow. One that will yield 5 quarts a day for ten months is a good cow and one that will average four quarts during that time is more than an average quality. That would make 1,200 quarts a year which at three cents a quarts, $39 We believe the Orange County milk dairies average about $40 per cow, and the quality of the cows is considerably above the average of the country.

It is as important to keep a cow good as it is to get her good. This can never be done by a careless, lazy milker. Always milk your cow quick perfectly dry and never counteract nature by taking away her calf. Let it suck, and don't be afraid of its butting her to death. It will distend the udder and make room for the secretion of milk. Be gentle with your cow and you will have a gentle cow. Select well, feed well, house well, milk well, and your cow will yeild well.—Selected.

Patent Medicines.

A Medicine that Never Debilitates.

DR. SANFORD'S

INVIGORATOR,

OR LIVER REMEDY.

HAS ALL THE SOOTHING VIRTUES OF A Purgative medicine, operating on the liver, stomach and bowels, without weakening them by irritating the delicate organs with harsh medicines. It acts simply and gently, on a surface moving by nature to every pore of all the secreted matters, at the same time stimulating the Liver to a proper performance of its functions.

The Invigorator cures the Sick Headache. Take one or two teaspoonsful at each attack and it will soon disappear. For an overloaded stomach, or when food rises or sours, take the Invigorator after eating, and it will not prove disagreeable or oppressive. For Heartburn, Palpitation, or difficult breathing, take a teaspoonful once or twice daily. For Loss of Appetite, Langor or Lowness, the medicine is invaluable. It will restore the appetite and make the food digest well.—Nightmare take a teaspoonful on retiring, and the demons of dream-land will all be fairies. After eating a heavy dinner, take a dose of Invigorator and it will relieve all oppression or fullness. The Invigorator is a Liver Remedy of unequalled virtue, acting directly on that organ, curing Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, Dysentery, Piles Worms, and all Female Obstructions, for which it has no equal.

We know there is nothing now before the American public, prepared with such skill by a scientific man, particularly for diseases of the Liver, as Dr. Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver Remedy. It has attained a reputation second to no other article in the world, simply because it tests its own merit. To convince all by trial that it will do all proprietors claim it to be, if any of our readers are suffering from such diseases as are described in Dr. Sanford's advertisement, we know of no remedy that will so surely cure as the Invigorator.

There has lately been brought to our notice a medicine that seems to possess wonderful, curative and healing properties in diseases of the Liver, stomache and Digestive Organs. It came to us with so many testimonials in its favor that we have noted its effects. Some of the worst cases of continual debility, caused by deranged liver, and in every instance the effect was to relieve or give a permanent cure. Dr Sanford's Invigorator, or Liver remedy is what we refer to. We always have been credulous about cures by patent medicines, but we are convinced that this medicine, for family use, is not over rated by the host of recommendations it has. Our advice is, for all troubled with Indigestion, Debility or Bowel Complaint, to get a bottle and try it; our word for it, relief will be experienced.

Blessings To The Invalids who use Dr Sanford's Invigorator, for it will relieve them of their pains as soon as it is taken into their stomach. Pain and misery cannot exist where the Invigorator is used, for it will banish darkness, of this there can be no doubt to those who try it, for it carries conviction with every dose taken. Another evidence is the thousands of Certificates from those who use it or have been cured by it.—Try one bottle, if it does not benefit, then we are mistaken.

AYER'S Cathartic Pills

(SUGAR COATED.)

ARE MADE TO

CLEANSE THE BLOOD AND CURE THE SICK

Invalids, Fathers, Mothers, Physicians, Philanthropists, and all Lovers of Health, are invited to try these Pills.

Headache, Sick Headache, Foul Stomach, Dyspepsia, and Stomach Complaints.

Dr. J. C. Ayer: Sir: I have found your Pills the best cure of the above complaints any Physician can prescribe for, and I do not hesitate to say so. Some of my friends have tried them, and they concur with me. If they will once give them a fair trial, the fact is worth knowing.

Yours with great respect, ED. W. PRESLE,
Clerk of Recorder Clerm.

Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaint.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
WASHINGTON, D. C. 7 Feb., 1857.

Sir: I have used your Pills in my general and hospital practice ever since I was made Physician of this Department, and they are the best cathartic we employ. Their unfailing action on the liver is quick and decisive, completely they are an admirable remedy for derangements of the organ. Indeed, I have seldom found a case of bilious disease so obstinate that it did not readily yield to them.

Faithfully yours, ALDEN BALL, M. D.,
Physician of the Interior Dept.

Dysentery, Relax, and Worms.

POST OFFICE, HARTLAND, LIV. CO., MICH., Nov. 16, 1856.

Dr. AYER: Your Pills are the perfection of medicine. They have done my wife more good than I can tell you. She had been sick and pining away for months. Just off to be doctored at great expense, but got no better. So then commenced taking your Pills, which soon started in by expelling large quantities of worms (dead) from her body. They afterwards cured her, and our two children of bloody dysentery. One of our neighbors had Ryal and my wife cured him with two doses of your Pills, when others around us paid from five to twenty dollars doctor bills, and lost much time, without being cured entirely even then. Such a medicine as yours, which is actually good and honest, will be prized here.

GEO. J. GRIFFIN, Postmaster.

Indigestion and Impurity of the Blood.

From Rev. J. V. Himes, Pastor of Advent Church, Boston.

Dr. AYER: I have used your Pills with extraordinary success in my family, and among those I am called to in distress. To regulate the organs of digestion and purify the blood they are the very best remedy I have ever known, and I can confidently recommend them to my friends. Yours, J. V. HIMES.

WARSAW, WYOMING Co., N. Y., Oct. 24, 1854.

DEAR SIR: I am using your Cathartic Pills in my practice, and find them an excellent purgative for clearing the system, and purify the fountains of the blood.

JOHN G. MEACHAM, M. D.

Erysipelas, Scrofula, King's Evil, Tetter, Tumors, and Salt Rheum.

From a Freeholding Merchant of St. Louis, Feb. 4, 1856.

Dr. AYER: Your Pills are the paragon of all that is great in medicine. They have cured my little daughter of ulcerous sores upon her hands and feet that had proved incurable for years. Her mother has been long grievously afflicted with blotches and pimples on her skin and in her hair. After our child was cured, she also tried your Pills, and they have cured her. ASA MORDECAI.

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and Gout.

From the Rev. Dr. Hawkes of the Methodist Epis. Church.

PULASKI HOUSE, SAVANNAH, GA., Jan. 8, 1855.

HONORED SIR: I should be ungrateful for the relief your skill has brought me if I did not report my case to you. A cold settled in my limbs and brought on excruciating neuralgic pains, which grew worse and worse, until by the time I left your residence in Baltimore, Dr. Mackenzie, I tried your Pills. Their effect were slow, but sure. By persevering in the use of them I am now entirely well.

Rev. SAMUEL CHASE, Bishop Indiana, Dec. 1855.

Dr. AYER: I have been entirely cured by your Pills of Rheumatic Gout—a painful disease that had afflicted me for years.

VINCENT SLIDELL.

For Dropsy, Plethora, or kindred Complaints, requiring an active purge, they are an excellent remedy.

For Costiveness or Constipation, and as a Dinner Pill, they are agreeable and effectual.

Fits, Suppression, Pleurisy, Inflammation, and even Deafness, and Partial Blindness, have been cured by the alterative action of these Pills.

Most of the pills in market contain Mercury, which although a valuable remedy in skilful hands, is dangerous in a public pill, from the deadful consequences that frequently follow its incautious use. These contain no mercury or mineral substance whatever.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, INFLUENZA, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION,

and for the relief of consumptive patients in advanced stages of the disease.

We need not speak to the public of its virtues. Throughout every State, and almost every hamlet of the American States, its wonderful cures of pulmonary complaints have made it already known. Nay, few are the families in any civilized country, but have living within some personal experience of its efficacy, and fewer yet is the community any where which have not among them some living trophy of its victory over the subtle and dangerous diseases of the throat and lungs. While it is the most powerful antidote yet known to man for the formidable and dangerous diseases of the pulmonary organs, it is also the possessor of a power and energy that can be relied upon with unfailing confidence, in all cases of Colds, that first settle on the throat and lungs. We believe the Cherry Pectoral gives more lives by far to mankind than all the other remedies for pulmonary consumption combined, for the reason that it cures. Keep it by you, and cure your colds while they are curable, for neglect them until no human skill can master the inexorable disease that fastened on the vitals, eats your life away. All know the dreadful fatality of lung disease, and yet they know too the ultimate fatality of this remedy, we need not write more than to assure them it is still made the best it can be. We spare no cost, no care, no toil to produce the most perfect possible, and this afford those who regard it the best agent which our skill can furnish, for their cure.

The Howard Association is a benevolent Institution, established by special enactment, for the relief of the sick and distressed, afflicted with "Virulent and Epidemic Diseases." It has now a surplus of money which the Directors have voted to expend in advertising the above notice. It is necessary to add that the Association commands the highest Medical skill of the age, and can furnish the most approved modern treatment.

Just Published, by the Association, a Report on Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, the vice of Onanism, Masturbation, Self Abuse, and other Diseases of the Sexual Organs, by the Consulting Surgeon, which will be sent by mail (in a sealed envelope) FREE OF CHARGE, on the receipt of two Stamps for postage.

Address, Dr. GEO. R. CALHOUN, Consulting Surgeon, Howard Association, No. South NINTH Street, Philadelphia, Pa., or order of the Directors.

ISRAEL HARTWELL, President.
GEO. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

A Retired Physician, 75 years of age, having lost his Father, two Brothers, a Sister, Son-in-law, Nephews and Nieces, by the dreadful disease, CONSUMPTION, and being with a Cough himself, determined, while in the East Indies, Egypt and Japan, to search for a remedy. He discovered a Preventive and Cure for Colds, Coughs, Bronchitis, Consumption, Nervous Debility and Asthma. His own life was cured immediately; he returned to his Relatives, who inherited the disease, and in connection with his son have employed it in their practice, during thousands of cases considered hopeless by others. For the purpose of rescuing as many of his suffering fellow beings as possible, he is sending a receipt to all who wish it for 10 cents; also to pay the postage, and the balance is free. Address DR. HEATH 101 Spring-street, opposite St. Nicholas Hotel, New York.

THE TECUMSEH NURSERY.

CHARLES STRONG, Proprietor.

The liberal encouragement hereto[illegible] extended to the subscribed me[illegible] time to time to increase the stock of every [illegible] and to add now I have one of the largest collections in this [illegible] which is excelled by none other in the country of our planet. These considerations, together with [illegible] other one, moderation in price, as far as possible as to other influences, second to none, to those commencing the business, or buying will appear. Every care is taken in the training and culture of my trees, while in the Nursery, to fit them in one for the [illegible] Planter, regardless of any of proportion, and [illegible] of transportation or handling points. I would recommend [illegible] persons to make their purchases in the Autumn for spring sales, as it is decidedly the best season.

For particulars, for which a charge barely covering expenses always made, is done in the most satisfactory manner. [illegible] to make my packages of trees [illegible] as the [illegible] of Railroad service—more than this I don't think I can safely promise. Conservatory of Times assurance, it may be proper for me to mention that the excellence of the Nursery has been publicly noticed in many periodicals [illegible] injury or injury to my Trees arising at their destination, even though they have been long on the way.

The prices for the entire trees appended in the annexed [illegible] you to the communication to be liberal and in order, the cash per thousand not being unreasonable number of hundreds less—and they are [illegible] the positive condition that the selections [illegible] so shall be left to me, or others pledging ourselves, however, that the choice of our correspondents shall be complied with as near as may be, and [illegible] selections be composed of the best leading varieties, in due proportion, with more of less [illegible] kinds, according to our ability to [illegible] their wishes.

To Correspondents.

☞ Write your Name, Place of Residence, County and State, so legibly that it can't be misunderstood. Disappointment is [illegible] to us may be [illegible] cause.

☞ Please give particular directions as to the [illegible] route or line, by which you would have your packages conveyed [illegible] whose care you would [illegible] them consigned. After [illegible] instruction in these particulars, we shall forward them according to the best of our judgment [illegible] and we expressly desire [illegible] be understood that all responsibility on our part as to the goods, ceases on delivering them to the forwarder. Unnoticed Heroes.

BY REV. T. HEMSTEAD.

Woods have their blossoms which we ne'er behold,
And skies their words whose light is never shown
Ocean, its treasures of unnoted gold,
And earth her heroes that are all unknown;
You meet them as you pass, and heed it not,
You may not know what host before them fell;
You may not count the battles they have fought—
The wreaths that crown them are invisible.

Yet they have fought and conquered—they have bent—
Night after night, beside the couch of pain;
They have confronted scorn and death, and lent
Their blood to make the stricken whole again;
They have been pilgrims to that desert shrine
Which sorrow rears in the bleak realm, Despair;
Oft have they struggled in that gloomy mine
Where only dust is made the toiler's share.

They have beheld their dearest hopes decay;
Oft have they seen their happiest dreams depart—
Have seen their golden idols turned to clay,
And many bear within a broken heart;
The world, in its deaf hurry, dimly knows
What hero souls in common forms are shrin'd;
It sun no flood of royal splendor throws
On the great battle-fields of silent Mind.

Their paths are not though pastures soft and green,
Their bloodless victories find no utterance here,
Their scars and triumphs are by us unseen,
Yet there is One who counts their every tear.
What is that secret power, that patient strength,
What is the sword, those conquering arms that prove
Them equal to all foes, and bring at length
The victor's crown? 'Tis this, that they can LOVE.

They love their fellow men, the leaves, the light,
The flowers and waves, and thus they keep their youth;
The stars and voices of the regal Night,
And most, they love God's everlasting truth;
Their veil'd and mighty scars they ever bear,
Those scars that lie deep-burn'd into the soul,
Won where the flaming eyes of vengeance glare—
And the tumultuous fires of passion roll.

They have been victors! they have conquered fields
Earth's dreaded Hannibals could never win;
They have stuck down the sword Ambition wields
And trampled lust and chained the hands of Sin;
They have won captives! their sweet tones have brought
The erring back to Virtue's flowery path;
Their own and others' hearts submission taught
To God's high will, and smooth'd the brow of wrath.

They drink the drops of trembling, but their moans
And anguish'd wails they stifle in the breast;
They say there is an Ear that hears their groans,
And in His house the weary will find rest;
Want, grief, the scorn of men on them descend;
They only say, "It is His righteous will,"
With chastened spirits to that will they bend,
Believing, striving, hoping, loving, still!

O, there are daily martyrdoms which we
Heed not—the sufferers are to us unknown;
But angels from the walls of Eden see
How glorious are the laurels they have won.

From the Olive Branch.

"GO IT."

You're a sinner, sir,
And you know it;
But no matter, friend,
"Go it."
Only by and by,
You may chance to die,
And you know it.

You defraud and cheat,
And you know it;
Mix the chaff with wheat—
"Go it."
Only there's a place,
When you run your race,
Shame will veil your face—
Dare you show it?

You have wronged the poor,
And you know it;
Made their sorrows sure—
"Go it."
Yonder wrinkled crone,
Shall before the throne,
All your sins make known;
How you sent her cold,
Shivering and old,
From the crazy wall,
Ready to its fall;
In the snow storm sent,
When for lack of rent,
Tears she gave and groan—
You—for bread—a stone.

You're a sinner, sir,
And you know it;
But no matter friend—
"Go it."
Only by and by,
You may chance to die—
There's a God on high,
And you know it.

Men have given you gold,
And you know it;
Earth your praises told—
"Go it."
God your gold can rust,
Turn your frame to dust
Asking for your trust—
Can you show it?

TEACHING THE YOUNG IDEA HOW TO SPEAR.—"Mother, where's Bill?"

"My son, don't let me hear you say Bill, again. You should say William."

"Well, mother, where's William?"

"In the yard, feeding the ducks."

"Oh, yes, I see him now. But, mother, what makes the ducks have such broad—a—broad—williams?"

"Go out with your brother, directly, you little scamp, or I'll cuff your ears!"

Looking out for Wrinkles.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

There had been a domestic storm in the household of Mr. Nicholson, and such storms, we regret to say, had become rather frequent in that household. Mr. Nicholson was a man of amiable temper, and kind feelings; but with defects of character that were often particularly annoying to his wife, who made everything stand around her, as the saying is. Mr. Nicholson was apt to forget and neglect, two faults with which Mrs. Nicholson had no patience, especially when his forgetting and neglecting interfered with matters bearing a relation to her daily round of duties.

A thorough business-training from youth up to manhood, and the consequent habits of order with a methodical routine of doing things insured to Mr. Nicholson success as a merchant. Without these important adjuncts to business, his naturally easy and amiable qualities would have sadly interferred with his material interests. But forgetfulness is out of the question where punctuality is strictly observed. It was out of his business where Nicholson's peculiar weakness were seen He was one of those class of men who keep their wives waiting, and who deserve the scoldings they not unfrequently receive—who forget to execute the little household commissions entrusted to them, and neglect, from day to day, and from week to week, the doing of things absolutely necessary to be done, in order to secure comfort at home.

"Edward," Mrs. Nicholson might say, as her husband is leaving for his place of business in the morning "wont you stop at the store as you go down, and tell Perkins to send up a bag of salt and a gallon of vinegar."

"Certainly," Nicholson answers, and in a way so cheerfully acquiescent, that his wife feels pleasure in his manifest willingness to oblige. But scarcely is Nicholson ten paces from his own door, ere some matter of business intrudes itself, and so fully occupies his thoughts, that he passes the store of Perkins, and even nods to Perkins himself, without once thinking of the salt and vinegar. Nor, until salt and vinegar are thrown upon him from the face and lips of his aggravated wife at dinner time, is he again aware that such articles exist.

"It is too bad!" he may answer; or, "what a terrible memory I have!" or, "I deserve a good scolding!" But Nicholson never resents his wife's use of salt and vinegar in such cases. Her anger is but a passing storm, and he knows that the sky will soon be clear again. Still, these out-breaks are by no means agreeable, and it is one of his chief regrets that Mrs. Nicholson's handsome face is so often marred by unbeautiful passion. He tries to be more thoughtful in regard to her wishes, but habit is strong and he goes on offending.

There had been, as we have intimated, one of these too often recurring storms in the household of Nicholson. His wife had said to him one morning—it is a little remarkable, knowing his particular infirmity, that she so steadily persisted in burdening him with commissions, not the half of which were ever attended to—

"Edward, won't you stop at Blackwell's as you go along, and ask Mrs. Blackwell to send me up that pattern of a basque I lent her? Margaret is coming this morning to make one for me. She can only give me a part of to-day Now, don't forget it, please."

"A basque pattern, did you say?"—Nicholson was always ready to oblige his wife.

"Yes. Mrs. Blackwell will know the pattern I mean. Tell her I would have sent for it, but that I have only one girl this week, and she is so cross that it is almost as much as my life is worth to ask her to do anything out of the kitchen."

"Hadn't you better send a note?" suggested Nicholson.

"It's not worth while. Mrs. Blackwell will know what I mean. It's a pattern I lent her a few days ago. Now don't forget, Edward. Remember that Margaret will be here this morning, and she can't do anything until she gets the pattern."

I'll attend to it," said the husband as he parted from his wife. But he didn't attend to it; and it was a foolish thing in Mrs. Nicholson, knowing his infirmity, to entrust him with any commission of importance. Almost past the door of Mrs. Blackwell he went, without a thought of the basque coming into his mind, and he kept onto his store, remaining altogether oblivious on the subject.

In due time Margaret arrived, as per engagement. Everything was ready for her, except the basque pattern, and that was still to be received from Mrs. Blackwell. Mrs. Nicholson was considerably annoyed by this delay, and talked out her feelings to Margaret pretty freely, as women of her peculiar temperament are wont to do on such occasions. She had two or three theories touching the matter. Now she was certain her husband had forgotten to call at Mrs. Blackwell's; and now she was quite as sure that he had called, and that Mrs. Blackwell didn't see fit to put herself to any special trouble in sending the pattern home.

"Let me go for it," said Margaret.—But Mrs. Nicholson answered—

"No. I'm certain Nicholson called; and in that case I wish her to send it home. She ought to have done it, anyhow, before this."

Hour after hour passed, but no pattern came. Beyond measure was Mrs. Nicholson annoyed; and had she not cause for annoyance? No lady reader will gainsay this for an instant. It was a trying case. Two or three times Margaret renewed her request to be permitted to go after the pattern; but the more the subject was pondered by Mrs. Nicholson, the stronger became her conviction that the neglect was all on the part of Mrs. Blackwell.

Finally, after waiting two or three hours, until it was too late to finish the basque on that day, even if the pattern were in hand, Margaret went away, leaving the disappointed Mrs Nicholson in the worst possible humor with herself and every one else.

The day was just burying itself in shadows, when Nicholson, weary in mind from business cares, and pleased to get home, stepped across the threshold His little pet, May, had been watching at the parlor window during the space of half an hour, and at the first glimpse of his form, had sprung away from her position, and was at the door ready to be caught up in her father's arms almost as soon as he had swung it open. And she was so caught up by her loving father, and almost smothered with kisses.

"Is that you, Edward?"

It was the voice of Mrs. Nicholson, calling from one of the upper rooms.

The response of her husband brought Mrs. Nicholson down with quick moving feet. She found him, just inside of the parlor door, with the happy little May in his arms, looking very cheerful, and utterly unconcious of any approaching storm.

"Just to think of it!" said Mrs. Nicholson, going off in an excited tone of voice—"Mrs. Blackwell never sent that basque pattern, and Margaret, after waiting here for several hours, went away without touching the garment she came expressly to make.

"I declare!" exclaimed Nicholson.—"Now isn't that too bad."

"Isn't what too bad? You don't mean to say that you didn't call at Mrs. Blackwell's?"

There was an outflashing of indignation from the eyes of Mrs. Nicholson at the very thought.

"I do mean to say that very thing!" replied Mr. Nicholson, with some penitence of manner. "It is all my fault! What could I have been thinking about? I'm very sorry, indeed!

"Sorry don't mend the matter!" retorted Mrs. Nicholson. "It's a shame for you to do so! Here I've had Margaret waiting nearly all day, without being able to take a stitch in my basque, which I expected to wear to-morrow, and all because you did not choose to take the trouble to step at Mrs. Blackwell's, and ask her to send home the pattern I lent her."

"Don't say—'didn't choose,' my dear," Mr. Nicholson's countenance changed.

"It's just what I say, and what I mean," answered Mrs. Nicholson with blinding indignation. 'If you had cared a particle about my comfort or convenience, or had possessed the smallest inclination to obey me, you never would have neglected that small request. I have cause to be angry."

'I'm very sorry,' said Mr. N.

'Oh, don't say sorry, again!' Mrs. Nicholson interrupted. 'I hate the word, and have no faith in it. Sorry!'

Little May, with a half frightened look, drew her arms around her father's neck and laid her head down upon his bosom.

For some moments longer the indignant woman stormed; and then, as there was no re-action from her husband to keep alive the turbulent spirit that possessed her, anger wasted its strength down to feebleness and silence.

The hush of sadness followed, as in all such cases, and tears succeeded to passion. Mrs Nicholson, after having poured out her vials of wrath, felt more unhappy than while bottling her indignation. Not a word of angry retort had passed her husband's lips; she would have felt better if he had betrayed some darker shade of feeling, and thus brought himself down nearer to the level upon which she had descended. But he only remained passive, with his loving litte May clinging to his neck.

At tea time but few words were exchanged by husband and wife. The cloud on May's spirits had nearly passed over, and she chatted away, and asked her usual score of childish questions.

After tea the gas was lighted above the centre table in the sitting room, and Mrs. Nicholson sat down with her work-basket.

Little May had a box of painted paper toys, and amused herself with these, talking to her fathe about them, and enjoying the interest he seemed to take in the curious figures they presented.

"What a funny old woman!" said little May to her father, laughing suddenly, in a merry voice, as she held out for his examination one of the pictures. Then as if a new thought had crossed her mind, she left her chair, and climbing into her mother's lap, commenced a close examination of her face. With eyes and fingers she searched it all over, in so curious a way, that both father and mother were amused as well as interested.

"What are you looking for, pet?" inquired the latter.

The question seemed a little to confuse the child, and she left her mother's lap, and resumed her place at the table, with a perceptible heightened color.

"Say, darling! What were you looking for in my face?"

"A wrinkl!" Mr. Nicholson laughed out loud. "What does little puss mean?"

Little puss, as her father often called her, now threw an arch look upon her mother, and said:

"Don't you know what aunt Mary read in the paper, yesterday?"

"No, dear; what was it?"

"Why, that a wife gets a new wrinkle in her face every time she scolds her husband. And I wanted to see———"

The child's voice was lost in the merry laugh that rung from her father's lips, as he caught her in his arms, and bore her with a triumphant air around the room.

"Well pet,"—he said, as his merriment subsided—"did you find a new wrinkle?"

For a moment or two Mrs. Nicholson was fluttered, and her face became all aglow from a quicker heart-beat. But her perception of the ludicrous was strong, and her good sense a balancing quality, and she quickly joined in the merry laugh that was all at her expense.

"No—there is'nt a wrinkle in her face," answered May positively.

"Nor shall one be seen there for twenty years to come," said Mrs. Nicholson, throwing a tender look upon her husband, "if no other cause shall produce them."

May's bedtime had come, and the child was borne away by her mother, who gave her many loving kisses ere she left her alone with the angels who watch over sleeping children.

She said nothing about the wrinkles as she rejoined her husband, but there were merry twinkles in both their eyes, and right feelings in both their hearts.

Mrs. Nicholson, who is a handsome woman, and just a little vain of her beauty, has quite reformed her ways in the manner of scolding her husband. There are dangers attending that peculiar domestic recreation that she is unwilling to encounter.

An Appointment Fit to be Made.

It is with feelings of unfeigned gratification that we are able to announce the appointment of our friend, JACOB BARNS, as Register of the Land Office, at Duncan Michigan, vice Hon. CHAS. H. TAYLOR, resigned. For twenty years, Mr. BARNS has been connected with the Press of Grand Rapids, as roller boy, compositor, publisher, proprietor and editor. His has been the ceaseless life of toil—the usual lot of those connected with the royal fraternity of Printers. He brings to the fulfillment of the duties of his office, an extensive knowledge of men and things, habits of industry, an amiable temper, affability of manners, and an integrity spotless, and admitted of all men. A Democrat from his boyhood, he has stood firm among the working ranks of the Democracy; and has ever borne aloft the flag of his party with unflinching nerve and with steadfast confidence in the triumph of our principles, the supremacy of the Constitution, the perpetuity of the Union, and the vindication of the right of Man to self-government. We congratulate Mr. BARNS upon his success,—the Democracy that are so worthy has been taken from the ranks,—and the Administration that it has selected an honest, capable, and faithful officer.

Home, Sweet Home!

That wide, open, friendly fire-place, with its lively, cracking mirth, or its sweet twilight embers, always appears to me the meet emblem of a contented, great heart answering back to your own joy, and lighting up your shadows. And sometimes, surrounded by strangers, the object of dull remark, or cold criticism, or ignorant condemnation, how have I pictured unto myself a world of warmth like unto the great fire place at home, where every man would be greeted with, "Welcome! welcome, brother!" and a comfortable, snug corner of his own, and where all answer each other with the sympathy and cheer of shining faces over a glowing hearth—Look kindly on the stranger, gentle friend, thy looks are either so many sweet, sunny beams, that betoken the common fellowship of true humanity, or so many icy rays that chill him to the heart—that freeze little by litt'e the fountains of love—that fill him with distrust of the world and hatred of his species. No man knows for how much of other's wickedness and wretchedness he may be held accountable. A look of thine may breed sorrow in thy brother, though a stranger. A look of thine may do a good deed, may shine from thy face to his face, and be reflected, like a ray of the sun, over half the globe.

Live, ye gentle scenes of home! Light up, ye bright fires of the domestic hearth! Glow, ye pleasant fancies of the wood fire! Smile ever, ye dimpled portraits on the wall of childhood! Come in, ye sweet lilac breezes, that rustle through the cosy curtains—the blossoms of youth and the airy old cobwebs of memory are shimmering in your light! Place may change, friends may come and go, hearts grow cold or wear away beneath the drops of care till they crumble and molder beneath the sod of the valley, but a pleasant home where childhood lived and loved, never dies. The memory thereof is a fortune—an indestructible faculty of self-renewing joy.

What is heaven itself but the renewal of the fresh hearts and delightful pleasures of childhood's home? A happy child looks forward to a happy home above. The hireling imitated but to early in guilt and misery, or in misery without guilt, he seldom hopes for better accommodation at the journey's end; and the shadow of his childhood descends before him to the grave.

Clouds and Afflictions.

Every cloud has two aspects. The earth-side is dark and cold—the heaven side is bright and warm. It is the same cloud, the same mass of vapor; but how different whether we view it from below or above! From below, it is only a canopy of leaden gloom—it spreads its shadow like a mantle over all that is fairest about us. From above, it appears the very pavilion of light—it glows like burnished silver in the sun's broad beams.

The cloud is an emblem of affliction.—All affliction has both an earth and a heaven side. Viewed from the earth, it is as gloomy, chilling and repulsive as the grave. It comes we know not whence, nor why. It lays its withering hand upon all that was dear, and leaves nothing to supply the void. It desolates without consoling. It takes away the last and dearest hope, without a hope of reviving again. The pleasures of the world, the well meant sympathies of friends, all that remains among the ruins of long cherished hopes, cannot help us now. They only probe without healing the wounds. The heavens are one mass of leaden clouds, whose muttering thunderings and flashing lightnings bring only terror and dismay.

But to this cloud there is an upper, a heavenly side. There the Sun of righteousness shines with healing in his beams. In these beams, the cloud glows with light and joy. Here in plainest lines is read the mystery of affliction; and the ways of God are justified to the sorrow-stricken soul. Here the darkness becomes light, the curse a blessing, the wail a song of praise. The light of heaven shining upon grief turns it into joy. We see all the mercy of God in Jesus Christ. We see it consenting to abase us now that it may afterward exalt us; wounding us that we may be the better healed; striking earthly hopes dead at our feet that we may not forget the heavenly; making us desolate now that we may on a future day rejoice in greater riches. O, blessed cloud, if we could only see the upper side of it; if all the glorious light that shines upon it from God's holy counsels, be only reflected back upon the soul!

You and I.

'Twas when the leaves were blushing
Fit adieu to autumn's dashing
And the night winds round us rushing,
With a sigh;
Beneath the tufted willow,
That headeth over the billow,
And listening to the roar
You and I.

There came such mystic whispers,
Floating on the evening shadows,
They seemed like spirit tongues
Stealing by;
And words that proved as fleeting,
Our lips were then repeating,
When sat 'neath the willow listening,
You and I.

Vain was the dream-chair woven,
Its fairy links were riven,
Though it were the glow of e'en
In the sky;
Its beauty long since vanished
But its memory all untarnished,
Clingeth to the past that banished,
You and I.

Now the drooping willow bendeth
Where the wavelets, song ascendeth,
And a music murmur lendeth
Dreamily;
Low and mournful through the willow
Sigh the winds that sweep the billow,
And sits listening to the echo.
Only I.

Prof. Morse's Account of the Disaster to the Cable.

From the N. Y. Observer.

Prof. MORSE communicates to his family the following diary of his voyage during the laying of the cable of the Atlantic Telegraph:

U. S. FRIGATE NIAGARA AT SEA,
Sat., Aug. 8, 1857—11 A. M.

* * * Aug. 11, 6 P. M.—We have just had a fearful alarm. Stop her! stop her! was reiterated from many voices on deck. On going up I perceived the cable had got out of its sheaves, and was running out at a great speed. All was confusion for a few moments. Mr. CANNING our friend who was the Engineer of the Newfoundland cable, showed great presence of mind, and to his coolness and skill is due the remedying of the evil. By rope-steppers the cable was at length brought to a stand still, but it strained most ominously, perspiring at every part large tar drops. But it held together long enough to put the cable on the sheaves again.

Aug. 12, Noon.—At 3:45 yesterday morning, in lat. 52 30, long. 1730, Mr BRIGHT, the Engineer, went on deck; our ship was going at the rate of 4 miles 2 fath. per hour, and the cable running out greater speed, perhaps at the rate of 5 miles the hour. Mr. Bright spoke to the man in charge of the brakes, asking him what strain was upon the cable, to which the answer was returned about 3,000 pounds. Mr. Bright directed him to put 100 pounds more of force upon the brakes, to check the speed of the cable.—This was demurred to by the man for a moment, who expressed a fear that it would not be prudent. Mr Bright, however, persevered in his orders. The brakes were applied with the additional force, which suddenly stopped the wheels of the paying-out apparatus, and of course brought the force of the unchecked speed of the ship as an addition to the strain.—At this time, too, there was a moderately heavy sea, which caused the ship's stern to rise several feet, and to the same degree to fall; when the stern fell, the cable under its immense strain, went down into the water easily and quickly, but when the stern was lifted by the irresistible power of the succeeding wave, the force exerted upon the cable, under such circumstances, would have parted a cable of four times the strength. Hence it is no wonder that our cable, subjected to such a tremendous and unnatural strain, should snap like pack-thread. It did snap, and in an instant the whole course and plan of our future proceedings were of a necessity changed.

How many visions of wealth, of fame and of pleasure were dependant for their realization on the integrity that little nerve-thread, spinning out like a spider's web from the stern of our noble ship, and (in view of the mighty forces of steam, and waves, and winds, and mechanism, brought to bear upon it,) quite as frail.—Yet, with all its frailness, nothing could exceed the beauty of its quiet passage to its ocean-bed, from the moment we had joined it to the shore end, until the fatal mistake of Mr Bright, which caused the breaking of it asunder. The effect on ship-board was very striking. It parted just before daylight. All hands run bed to the deck, but there was no confusion; the telegraph machinery had stopped, they men gathered round in mournful groups, their tones were as sad, and voices as low as if a death had occured on board. I believe there was not a man in the ship who did not feel really as melancholy as if a comrade had been lost overboard.—I feel sorry for Mr. Bright; he justly and magnanimously frees all on board from blame.

What we shall now do this season is doubtful, until we reach the shore and have communication with the Company.

Rail Roads, and Those who Build Them.

It will be remembered by some of our readers that something more than two years ago, when the popular apprehension of rail-road monopoly was at its height, we attempted to point out the many benefits they could not fail to confer upon those sections of the country through which they were located, while at the same time we more than intimated that it might prove instead of a monopoly, a sacrifice to those who were building them.

None will now deny that the result has justified these intimations. The effect of these rail roads upon the entire west has been, to place our markets within a forty-eight hours ride of New York, thereby greatly increasing the value of products, and adding to the value of our lands from five to twenty-five dollars per acre. Now the very thing which was opposed and feared as a monopoly has done this, while the capital with which it has been done, has sunk in value from twenty five to seventy-five per cent.

We incline to the opinion that a large portion of this depression is rather a monetary panic than any thing permanent or well founded, but it is nevertheless a fact, that very few of our rail-roads are worth the money they have cost. Their monthly reports of proceeds, it is true seem to figure up a large amount, and very readily give the impression that they are making their owners rich, but it must be recollected that the principal portion of the capital which went to build them, is borrowed money, still unpaid, and the semi annual interest upon the millions of money, thus borrowed in Europe, is no slight draw back upon the rapidity with which this imaginary wealth is acquired.

Besides it must be borne in mind that there was not the least difficulty in making every dollar of the actual capitol belonging in this country which has been thus paid in to those enterprizes, pay a much higher per cent, in almost any other way in which it might have been safely invested.

Instead therefore of fearing or complaining of monopoly from those whose enterprise has put on foot, and pushed forward to active operation these rail-road enterprises, we owe to them a debt of gratitude, for the result is, whether designed or not, that the value of our property has been actually doubled upon our hands, and that too without any similar material advantage to them, if not actually at their expense and loss. We are no friends of monopoly anywhere. We do not hold that goverment even, has a right to take and appropriate to the few, what was made and meant for all. But we should not suffer our hatred to monopoly to make us disregardful of our own true interests, or unreasonable towards those whose united enterprise, and that too even to their own individual loss, has tended so manifestly to promote them.

ADJOURNED SCHOOL MEETING.—The adjourned School meeting on Monday evening last, resulted in the re-election of the following officers for the ensuing year. Moderator—C. A. Stacy; Director—P. Bills; Assessor—G. W Pennock; Trustee in the place of T. Deuel whose term of office had expired; J. G. Roberts.

The new School Building was accepted, and the necessary amounts for completing the improvements, and for the current expenses of the various Schools for another year cheerfully voted.

The meeting was a spirited one, and evinced a commendable interest on the part of our citizens, in the eductational affairs of the district and village.

BURGLARY AT TECUMSEH.—The new brick Store of A. Anderson & Co in this village was entered in the rear by boring out a portion of the door, on last Tuesday night, and about $500 worth of Silks and choice goods, selected after a pretty general overhauling of the store, and taken away, without any trace thus far of those engaged in perpetrating the burglary.—All the wrappers, cost marks, &c., by which the goods might be identified, were very carefully removed and left behind. We did not suppose that Tecumseh was sufficiently popular to deserve a distinction of this kind, Mr. A. had just removed his store into the new brick block, and we fear kept these gentlemen waiting a while, as he did not get into it so soon as he anticipated. But one other store in the block is as yet occupied, and no one slept in the block that night.

DETROIT, Oct. 6.

The Farmers & Mechanics Bank of this city has been placed under injunction by the Attorney General.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 5.

Voorhis, Griggs & Co. suspended today, it is supposed, temporarily. It is impossible to sell exchange.

Editorial Correspondence.

Michigan State Fair &c.

Detroit, Oct. 2d, 1857.

The attendance upon the State Fair, is much reduced from what might justly have been anticipated from two reasons, the extreme pressure upon the money market, and the continuous rain almost from its commencement.

The second day only, of the four days devoted to it, was exempt from rain, and upon the third and fourth day it rained almost constantly. The ground was of course in very bad condition for the exhibition of trotting and carriage horses, and yet the show is said to have been very good.

The show of Devons and Durhams was large and fine, that of swine and sheep small and select. The Floral Hall was handsomely arranged, and well filled for the season. Owing to the lateness of the season, winter fruit is scarcely yet mature, and the show in this respect, though more profuse, of course, was scarcely superior to that of our Northern Lenawee Society. We saw some very fine pears, and also some fine grapes and peaches.—Owing to the storminess of the day, the Address of Mr. Howard was postponed to the City Hall, to be delivered in the evening. We notice that the Editor of the Free Press of this morning understands it to have been delivered from the stand upon the ground at 2 o'clock yesterday, did not hear it himself, but is informed by those who did, that it was an interesting affair. He must have had rather interesting informants. There is evidently a confusion of ideas somewhere, or rather it may perhaps be taken as an additional evidence that morning editorials, written on e day in advance, are not always reliable.

The closing of the Peninsular Bank by injunction day before yesterday, created quite a panic among the small bill holders in the city, and there was quite a run upon the Michigan Insurance and the Farmers and Mechanics Banks yesterday. The crowd about the Farmers and Mechanics Bank was kept up all day, and yet at night but little more than $5000 had been drawn from its vaults. Business men continue to deposit as usual and express the fullest confidence that both of them are abundantly able to meet promptly any run that can be made upon them. The closing of the Peninsular Bank is also regarded here as rather a financial ruse, than a veritable failure, and its bills continuance to be taken at par throughout the city. Our advice to our subscribers would be to hold on to discredited bills for the present, rather than suffer any severe loss at the hands of the brokers, under the influence of a sudden, and for the most part unfounded panic.

The banks are for the most part undoubtedly sound, and will, in the event, pay dollar for dollar on their issues.

The Provincial Fair is now in progress at Brantford, Canada West—and but for the storminess of the weather, we would just run over and see how her majesty's subjects do up things of this kind. To be sure it is understood that all the pick-pockets have gone over there, but it is generally safe enough for an editor to move about alike regardless and defiant of their skill.

We hear of no instances of loss here, where the parties were even reasonably prudent or circumspect.

The Historical Society met last evening, but it was so rainy that we did not attend, as we had engaged and intended to.—Detroit is rapidly improving, and relieved at length of the insane idea, that the Michigan Central is the only rail-road that should be allowed to lead into the city. The influence of the Detroit and Milwaukee, and the Detroit and Toledo roads upon the business of the city and upon the value of real estate there is beginning to be sensibly felt, and acknowledged—and is fast inducing a public spirit among its leading business men more worthy of the commercial emporium of the State.

Ladies' Repository.

The October No. of the Repository is received promptly as usual, and is always welcome to our exchanges. As now conducted, it furnishes us about the finest engraved plates of any of the Magazines published in America—while at the same time its reading columns exhibit an elevation of thought and refinement of taste not often excelled and its typographical execution is a worthy specimen of art.—Edited by D. W. Clark D. D. and published monthly by Messrs. Swormstedt and Poe, Cincinnati O, at Two Dollars per annum, in advance.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.—The compliment of a serenade was last night tendered to the Hon. Isaac Toucey, secretary of the Navy, by the marine band. Mr. Toucey came forth, and, in a few kind and well chosen remarks, welcomed these admirable musicians to the hospitality of his house.—[Washington States.

General News.

NEW YORK, Oct. 2.

There was a slightly improved feeling in the money market to-day, the Banks carrying out their agreement of Tuesday in good faith.

The payments at the sub-treasury were heavy, amounting to $600,000 before 12 o'clock.

The Old Saratoga Bank of this State, the Stark Bank of Vermont, and the Bass River were all thrown out to-day.

It is believed, from inquiries made at the principal Banks, that the heavy payments due to-morrow will mostly be met.

The panic in the stock market this morning was complete. The decline all around ranging from 1a8 per cent. The Michigan Central has fallen 10 per cent since yesterday; Galena & Chicago 8; Erie convertables of 1871, 3. Philadelphia funds are negotiated at 7 per cent., and Baltimore at 8. A large sum in produce, with bills of lading attached, was sold at 90.

Late in the day two other failures were announced, viz: Swift, Ransom & Co., brokers and agents of a Chicago banking house, and Powell, Randall & Co., forwarders, Newburg. The latter firm do an immense business, and are interested largely in the Powell Bank.

J. B. Jervis was elected President of the Michigan Southern Rail Road to-day.

BOSTON, Oct. 2.

Money matters continue about the same. The general repudiation of the idea of Bank suspensions manifested at the meeting of merchants to-day, gives more tone to the public confidence but does not afford the relief. The pressure is steady and very heavy.

Parsons, Cutler & Co., Dry Goods Dealers, and Moses Pond & Co., Stove Dealers, failed to-day.

NEW YORK, Oct. 2.

There has been something of a run on the Williamsburgh Banks and Savings institutions there to-day, in consequence of the failure of the Farmers & Artizans Bank. The demand was promptly met.

BOSTON, Oct 2.

The Merchants meeting to-day adopted resolutions strongly against any suspension of specie payment.

ALBANY, Oct. 2.

Circulation notes to the amount of $20,000 were received at the bank department up to 5 o'clock. About the same amount were received yesterday.

Supt. Cook, yesterday released $180,000 worth of stock securities, and about the same amount was released to day. A large pile of circulating notes yet remains in the department uncounted, although work in the office is kept up till 9 o'clock P. M.

Notwithstanding the depression in stocks the half million loan will be offered by the Commissioners of the Canal Fund on the 8th inst., according to advertisement.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 3.

The papers announce that the Reading R. R Co., was unable to meet their payment yesterday and suffered their notes to be protested. This is a blue day for stocks. There was no sales of Reading, 10c was bid.

The Pennsylvania Bank will not go into line until Monday next.

Messrs E. W. Clark & Co., bankers, suspended payment this morning.

NEW YORK, Oct. 3.

Messrs. Clark, Dodge & Co., Bankers have suspended.

The Powell Bank of Newburg, is thrown out to-day.

BOSTON, Oct. 3

Messrs. J. W. Clark & Co., Bankers, suspended payment this morning.

CINCINNATTI, Oct. 3.

The result of the day in the money market is more favorable than was expected; not one important failure. A good deal of third and fourth class paper was protested, but none of the first or second class houses. The entire business community is surprised at the result, as a large number of failures were feared.

PROVIDENCE, Oct. 3.

The Rhode Island Central Bank, was temporarily enjoined to day, on application of the Bank Commissioners. The assets are believed to be considerably above its liabilities.

NEW YORK, Oct. 3.

This has been a gloomy day in Wall St The suspension of Clark, Dodge & Co. exercised a most depressing effect upon the market, already burdened to its full capacity to sustain.

Owing to a failure of the Southern mail from here on Thursday, to connect at Philadelphia, and to reach here to-day, about $800,000 which should have been liberated to day, will remain in the sub-treasury till Monday.

The feeling of the Stock Exchange is now a total depression. It received a severe shock by the failure of Clark, Dodge & Co., who were supposed to stand above casualty. The sole cause of their suspension is said to have been the blockade in exchange. They have a surplus of over two millions.

One Dollar and a Half Per Year in Advance.

Such are the terms to be found at the head of almost every Weekly Paper in the country, but we fear few have sufficient regard for the real meaning and import of it. Let us examine, then, and see if we cannot discover in this fact, at least one great secret, connected with the success or failure of so many who have embarked in the business of Publishing a Paper.

"One Dollar and a Half a year in advance?" "Oh no," says one man, "I never can consent to pay for a thing before I get it. I am willing to subscribe, and hope you will get along successfully; but I can't pay in advance—don't like the principle." The publisher is induced to take his name, because he wishes to swell his list of patrons; and considering the position of the man, feels that he can almost afford to give him the Paper, rather than not secure his influence. So the publisher might go to every man from whom he would reasonably expect a Dollar or two, only to be repulsed with, "I never subscribe for a paper and pay in advance."

The office has been bought and located; in the purchase of the material he has perhaps given all the ready money he possessed, and still this was insufficient to furnish all the requisite, and for the balance he gives "Six months from date I promise to pay," &c. Publication day arrives, and his Paper "comes out" looking finely, and calls forth many such remarks as these: 'Capital Paper;' 'Guess he'll do first rate;' 'Appears like a good fellow,' &c., &c. Thus it passes on, until after a few weeks they consider only that on such a day 'The Weekly Intelligencer' will make its appearance. Everybody, at first, wishes to subscribe for the Paper, and everybody hoped he would do well; but nobody is willing to pay One Dollar and a Half in advance.

Fortune, 'tis said, favors the brave; and as our aspirant for Newspaperial honors, by sacrifices, or credit, is enabled for a time to send out his little sheet on its errand of instruction and usefulness. Six months have now elapsed, and the poor man finds himself with one ream of paper, when he should have two—no credit—and to crown all, just at this particular time is pops one of those little slips which reads, 'I promise to pay,' and altogether makes upon his mind a decided impression.—What's to be done? Aye, that's the question, What's to be done? Publication day arrives, and only a half sheet takes the place of the 'Capital Paper' which six months before was so liberally subscribed for by his friends, who hoped it would succeed! As a leading article you will find something after this sort:

APOLOGY.—Owing to some unaccountable delay in getting our regular supply of paper, we are this week obliged to issue only half a sheet. We trust such a necessity will not arise again, it being as unpleasant to ourselves as it is unacceptable to our readers.

Trace the column down and you will find the true secret, embodied in a polite but urgent request for delinquents to send in the amount of their subscriptions, to enable the publisher to meet the current expenses of his paper. But alas! no one chooses to see the point of the thing, and many, after carelessly reading it over, wonder that a paper cannot be furnished without dunning its subscribers before the year is out. A few months more of 'lingering torment' and the paper 'goes up;' leaving its publisher burdened with any quantity of small bills, which he is utterly unable to pay;—while his subsciption book is well filled with the names of good men who 'took the paper,' but never pay for such things in advance. Some of them will doubtless congratulate themselves upon their good luck in not paying when they subscribed, as they would now be losers to the amount of a half year's subscription. Silly mortals! you never stop to think that your system has been the means of involving a worthy man in debt and at the same time depriving yourselves of what might have been a real benefit to you. Had every subscriber paid his one dollar and a half in advance—the printer would have had a capital upon which to work, and you would have insured yourself against loss.

Equally injurious and fatal to the success of any newspaper, is the plan adopted by some publishers, viz—One Dollar and Fifty Cents a year in advance, or two dollars at the end of the year. The same objection we have raised against the other system may be presented against this. If either plan has its preference, we should most certainly award them to the first; for by that no delay is offered—while by the last, no payment can be expected before the expiration of the year, except at the option of the subscriber. Suppose the year is up, and the printer makes an effort to collect in the various amounts outstanding. Within his own sphere this may easily be done, perhaps; but outside of it he must be under the necessity of sending or appointing an Agent to do the business for him—who, after a week's trial reports that Mr. A. has gone to California,—Mr. B. is dead, Mr. C. has removed to parts unknown, and when he comes to sum up, he finds that out of three hundred papers sent abroad, two hundred have been to people from whom he will never realize one single cent.

Not alone do the remarks above apply to subscription, but all departments, of labor connected with, and all benefits issuing from the hands of the printer.

In advertising, there are many reasons why a cash system should be strictly adhered to, but we will give only two of the most prominent.

First.—The publisher looks to the advertising patronage, mainly for his support and profit. No country paper can sustain itself solely upon the small amounts of money raised by its suescriptions, for in very many cases the price got for the printed sheet is not equal to the cost of the paper as it comes from the mill. It must then follow that unless the publisher has a surplus of cash capital, on which to rely during the time of publication, this must be rendered not a business of profit but loss.

Second.—The advertiser should pay on the first insertion, from the moment the advertisement issues from the Office, that moment it becomes of value to the advertiser. Why then, should the printer be asked to benefit others at his own expense.

Finally everything requires it;—for carrying on the printing business demands more or less cash, and upon the same principle, those who do business with the printer should feel willing to give him a proportion of cash to enable him to sustain his paper upon a responsible basis. The office must be paid for; paper must be bought; help must be obtained and paid; and yet subscribers, in too many instances, expect to have a paper furnished them for fifty two weeks in succession before they, on their part, are expected to give anytoing in return.

The only remedy for all these faults of which we have spoken above seems to us to be this;—the adoption of an invariable rule of Payment in Advance.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 2

The Secretary of the Interior has recently invested nearly one million dollars in the State Stocks of Missouri, Pennsylvania, Illinois, North Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia, in trust for the various Indian tribes. All, but $50,000 of that amount, has been drawn from the Treasury. The present time was chosen for the investment in order to contribute something towards the relief of the money market, while $180,000 has thus been realized in the transaction for the Indians.

A negrtive answer has been given at the Land Office to the inquiries as to whether a number of persons, forming themselves into a Joint Stock Association can have the benefit of the Graduation Act by becoming settlers on the Public Lands, not for their individual benefit but that of their common interest. The Ground for this answer is, that the Graduation Act was intended for the benefit of actual settlers and cultivators of the soil only, not for speculation; and that the rights given are personal and because of actual settlement and cultivation, already made or contemplated.

Educational Mass Meeting.

The State Teachers Association, which recently met at Adrian, being deeply awakening a deeper interest on the part of parents, and the public generally, in the noble work of education, have appointed a to be holden at the Union School House in Tecumseh, Saturday, Oct., 24th, 1857.

GRAND MASS MEETING

The meeting will be addressed by Judge Beaman of Adrian, Judge Stacy of Tecumseh, Q. M Gregory, Editor of Teachers Journal and others. A large attendance is expected from Adrian, Clinton and other adjoining towns.

FRANKLIN HUBBARD,
President of S. T. Association.

Dr. Baumback in his travels on the Cape of Good Hope says: I found a very frequent use among the Dutch Boers of the back country of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which they hang up by a thread around the neck of a child, bottle to a peg over their bunnocks. Indeed this seems to be their sole protection against the throat and lung disorders which are very prevalent among them. I thought it a speaking comment on the practical genius of the American people, that they should find in the staple, I believe the only remedy the people buy to use. Asking if they used some manufacturers Pills, they told me no, better purgatives grew all around them, and any one could prepare.

☞ For $3,

We will give you Putnam's Monthly, Emerson's Consolidated Magazine, and the Tecumseh Herald, one year.

Who that is troubled with any of the disagreeable Complaints, such as Jaundice, Dyspepsia or Liver Disease of any kind, would like to know of a remedy that will, seemingly visitations? We feel that we are doing our invalid readers an invaluable service, if we can induce them to get a bottle of Dr. Sanfords Invigorator, and take it. We know from personal experience that it is one of the greatest remedies for general debility and consequent inactive bodily powers ever before used. Its action is so perfect and complete as to give relief the first time. One bottle will be all that is needed. We know of nothing we can recommend with such confidence, as a family medicine, as the Invigorator.

☞ We have a large stove, and would like to have some "chunks" to burn in it.

☞ Mrs. Bissell has received a new stock of Ambrotype fixtures, and is prepared to take the nicest kind of a picture. See card.

☞ Do you want a good magazine?—For $3 we will give the Herald and Putnam & Emerson's magazine consolidated

☞ D. P. Bunnell advertises his property for sale. See Special Notices.

☞ P. J Van Vleet will sell a valuable lot of Stock, &c. at auction, at his residence in Macon, on Friday, Oct. 9th, at 10 o'clock A. M.

☞ Our Clinton friends complain of not receiving their papers It is not our fault. Any time they will send word of the non appearance of the Herald, we will send it by the next mail.

☞ We intend to be at the Printer's Convention to-day at 2 o'clock and will give our friends the proceedings in the next issue

☞ Farmers please read an article "will wheat turn into chess," on the Agricultural column It was taken from the Grand Rapids Eagle Will some one answer it?

☞ Lewis Woodard will sell at Auction, at his residence in Bridgewater, a valuable lot of Property

☞ A telegraphic dispatch was sent from Adrian to Detroit last Friday, saying the Bank of Tecumseh had closed. The Bank did close that night and was opened at banking hours the next morning, contrary to the expectations of a Broker in Adrian—what a pity.

☞ We received the Muskegon Journal, a nice looking sheet, printed at Muskegon, Ottawa co., Michigan. It has a stereotype of the village in which it is printed, for its head, which is a good advertisement for the Place. It advocates democratic principles, and is at war with the other two county papers, the CLARION, republican, and the TIMES, independent.

☞ A. Anderson & Co. have moved into their New Brick Store. It is a beauty.

☞ John Cummins continues to offer Insurance Policies in the best companies of the United States. See advertisement.

☞ An Educational mass meeting will be held in this village on Saturday, Oct. 24th. Among the speakers we notice F. C. Beaman, C. A Stacy, Q M. Gregory, and others.

☞ Hon. JOHN B JERVIS was elected President of the Michigan Southern and Northern Indiana Railroad, on Friday The employees of the Company at each place hoisted their beautiful American flag, on the tall pole at the Depot—the election of Mr Jervis is hailed as a herald of a better day in the affairs of the company He has no superior for this position in America.—Adrian Exp.

☞ First class in Oriental Philosophy "Thibbets, what is life?"

"Life consists of money, a hoss, and a fashionable wife."

"Next, what is death?"

"A paymaster, who settles everybody's debts and gives the tombstones as receipts in full of all demands."

"What is poverty?"

"The reward of merit Genius generally receives from a discriminating public"

"What is religion?"

"Doing unto others as you please, with the understanding them a return of the compliment"

"What is fame?"

"A six line puff in a newspaper while living, and your fortune to your enemies when dead."

☞ REAL ESTATE IN KANSAS.—One day last week N. S Wood & Co., real estate agents of this town sold, on Massachusetts street, 16 feet front, 117 deep, for $1,650, over $100 per foot. N. S Wood purchased the lot, 50 feet front, of which this is a part, in the fall of 1854, for $75, or $1,50 per foot He says he was also afraid to risk the money, as it looked like throwing it away. This much for real estate in Kansas. Wood & Co have removed their office one door further south.—Lenawee Exp.

A FEW WORDS ON THE RATIONAL TREATMENT, without Medicine, of Spermatorrhea or Local Weakness, Nocturnal Emissions, Genital and Nervous Debility, Premature Decay of the System, Impotency, and Impediments to Marriage generally, by B. DE LANEY, M-D.

The important fact that the many alarming complaints originating in the imprudence and solitude of youth, may be easily removed WITHOUT MEDICINE, is in this small tract clearly demonstrated; and the entirely new and highly successful treatment, as adopted by the Author, fully explained, by means of which every one is enabled to cure HIMSELF perfectly and at the least possible cost, thereby avoiding all the advertised nostrums of the day.

Sent to any address, gratis and post free in a sealed envelope, by remitting two postage stamps to Dr. B. DE LANEY, 17 Lispenard Street, New York.

B. J. BIDWELL.

Chicago Street, Tecumseh,

I am now opening a Large, and General Assortment of

Dry Goods and Groceries,

and shall be receiving from week to week, through the Season, any Goods that may be wanted, from the Eastern Manufacturers, and Jobbers of

New York, Boston,

and Other Cities in the East.

I have tried during Nineteen Years of my life the various modes of doing business

Firstly for Cash.
Secondly on Short Credit.
Thirdly, had to take Long Credit, Orders and Accounts.

Lastly, I have been compelled to wait for payment of Goods sold on Six Months time, long enough for a man to visit California, get rich, and return, before payment could be forced or coaxed.

Now I wish to say, to my numerous friends and patrons, that I am thoroughly convinced that the mode of buying goods on time is both injurious to the buyer and seller.

I will hereafter Sell for Ready pay, at such prices that will defy all competion in this Town, State, or the United States.

No one should buy a dollars worth of Goods without calling at the

Great Western Cash Store,

and get the prices. Some are so unfortunate as to be compelled to trade at long credit stores—to those I would say, Call and See what you can save by having the Ready or something as good, to use where you pleasp.

Call one and all, I wish to see the light of your countenance, and the cash from your pockets. B. J. BIDWELL.

Will Wheat Turn Into Chess

Knowing that your paper has a wide circulation among the Farming Community, and that they desire light upon all subjects pertaining to their occupation, I am induced to say a few words upon the subject of TRANSMUTATIONS. Probably more than half of my fellow Agriculturalists believe that most absurd theory, that Wheat will turn into Chess. Some say that "owing to the frequent freezing and thawing, during the Winter and Spring, the Wheat will be killed, and the same plant thus killed will produce Chess."

Others affirm that pasturing or treading it down at some particular season will cause Chess to appear instead of Wheat. Suppose I should plant an Apple Tree in the Fall season, treat it as bad as the Wheat has been treated, which caused it to turn into Chess and I reasonably expect, in the following Spring, I find that same Apple Tree changed to a Pear, Peach, or Cherry Tree? If so, why then there would be good foundations for believing this absurd theory of Transmutation of grain. The doctrine that like produces like in nature is admitted by all men of Science, and my experience in farming for the past thirty five years has convinced me that I cannot produce Chess from Wheat; when my Land has been clean, and my seed clean, I always have clean Wheat.

Perhaps we never had a more severe season than last Winter and Spring, to winter-kill Wheat. My Wheat was badly winter-killed. In the Spring some of the believers in transmutation seeing the sad condition of my Wheat said to me, "you will be convinced this season that Wheat will turn to Chess." From the time my Wheat was in head until ripe, (a field of 12 acres) I offered one shilling each for every stool of Chess found growing in the field; two stools, only, have been found in the whole field this season.

Having grown the same Wheat on my Farm for a number of years, and believing it would be best to get seed from another soil, I sent my son some eight or ten miles, into the Timbered Land (my Farm being openings), to buy seed wheat. He examined some six or eight different samples, and the best found was pronounced clean from chess, by the Farmer he bought it of, and who raised it. Seventeen bushels were purchased as clean seed.—When I examined it I found the wheat was so foul with chess that no good Farmer would think of sowing it.—Now for the proof of its cleanliness: having a good mill I determined to make it cleaner before sowing it. I put it twice through my mill, and the chess taken from that seventeen bushels of clean wheat measured eight quarts, and enough left then to call it foul.

I have observed that those Farmers who believe in transmutation, are most careless in sowing chess, for the best of reasons to themselves, viz: they expect a portion of their wheat will turn into chess, and that renders them careless in seperating Chess from their seeds. Now suppose I sow a quart of Chess per acre, mixed with my wheat, part of the wheat is winter-killed, and the Chess, being more hardy, survives the winter, and having ample room to spread, will produce a heavy and abundant crop without the aid of Transmutation.

DANIEL SCHERMERHORN.

Walker, Kent Co., Sept. 19, '57.

[We are obliged to Mr. S. for the above. The opinion that wheat will turn into chess is an old one. Pliny believed it—"Primum omnium frumenti vitium avena est; et hordeum in eam degenerat." This change of wheat into chess, as he thought, was occasioned by a moist soil, wet weather, bad seed. Thousands of American Farmers believe that wheat changes into chess. There never was a greater humbug. If Farmers would never sow chess they would never reap it.—Chess grows from the seed of chess, just as wheat grows from the seed of wheat.] E. & H.

The Crops and their Prices.

During the month we have been as far south as Kentucky, as will be inferred from our report of a visit to the Fair of the United States Agricultural Society; and we have also paid a visit to a portion of Hillsdale and Jackson counties. The warm dry weather of the past month has ripened the corn and buckwheat crops, and both are coming in well. Many fields of buckwheat were harvested by the 20th, and much corn was ready to be cut up at the same date. The farming community feel relieved from much anxiety as to the crop of corn. At present the feeling is anything but satisfactory as to the value of wheat. The panic in the money market, together with the report that the crops are so abundant, has had the effect of depreciating prices, so that it is at present unadvisable for farmers to put their wheat in market. We incline to think that the decline has been too rapid, and that there will be nothing lost by farmers holding on to their stock of wheat. We are well aware that there is a large crop to go forward to the Atlantic markets, but we incline to doubt that it is as large as some of the grain buyers would have us believe.

We know that the wheat crops of 1855 and 1856 were severally estimated, in the Patent Office reports at 165 million of bushels, and 180 million of bushels, yet the report of the Treasury for 1856, puts the wheat crop of 1855 at only 100 millions of bushels, and thus leaving a deficiency of 56 millions between the actual produce and the estimate for that year. Taking the same ratio of estimate, and we have about 118 millions of bushels as the actual produce of last year.

It is true that the yield of wheat is better in whole of the States than it was last year; but it is far from safe to estimate it at more than 160 millions of bushels. In the states where there has been an increased production, we think it is balanced by those which have failed to produce a full crop. For instance New York, which has not a full crop, will balance the increase in such States as Tennessee, Kentucky and Missouri, while in Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin and other western states, the increased production is met by an increase of consumption caused by a larger population, and a greater proportion of consumers.

In 1850, the population was 23,191,876, and the production of wheat was 100,485,844. In that year there was exported about seven millions of bushels, leaving about four bushels per head for home consumption. Since then in years of scarcity our exports have gone as high as 29 millions of bushels for a single year. This year we doubt if they exceed ten millions, and taking that from the whole amount estimated as the actual produce, it leaves but 150 millions of bushels.—Our population at the present date, is supposed to reach close up to thirty millions, and thus it will be noted that we have five bushels of wheat per head for home consumption, instead of four bushels which was the ratio in 1850.

With these data before us, we are not inclined to believe that wheat should be worth less than a dollar a bushel, while they incline to us to hope that it will be worth more before the crops of 1858.

It is that the accounts of the crops in Europe are very promising. The French journals received at this office state that the cereals had surpassed the expectations of all in abundant produce, and that the fine weather during harvest had permitted the crops to be secured in the best conditions.—The effect on the prices was to lower the rates on average over the whole of France about one franc and 60 centimes per hectoletre, or about ten cents per bushel.

Out of nearly 200 answers to letters sent to all parts of the kingdom, making inquiries about the crops, two thirds at least report the wheat crop over an average and the remainder call it, a full average. The Agricultural Gazette in summing up the table of reports says, "The wheat crop may be pronounced unusually large. The barley crop is of unusual extent but will probably yield an average per acre. The oat crop is decidedly below its average productiveness.—Pulse crops are for most part inferior. Potatoes have promised better but are more diseased than they have been for several years. The hay crop is good and unusually well got in. Turnips are inferior, and mangel wurzels generally good."

From this we conclude, that the demand for Wheat will be light, but for corn will be heavy and this will probably be at fair rates. We consider it doing well when it does not fall below 50 cents a bushel.

In our opinion farmers should hold on to their wheat for the present, as it cannot be much lower than it now is, whilst the chances are in favor of a slight advance as the necessities of the home demand are properly understood.

WILL BUY

ONE OF THE BEST PURGATIVE AND LIVER MEDICINES now before the public, namely DR. SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR, or LIVER REMEDY, that acts as a Cathartic, easier, milder and more effectual than any other medicines now in use. It is only a Cathartic, but a Liver remedy, so acting first on the Liver, to expel its morbid matter, then on the stomach and bowels to carry off that matter thus accomplishing two purposes effectually, without any of the painful feeling experienced in the operations of most Cathartics; it strengthens the system at the same time that it purges it, and when taken daily in moderate doses will give health and buoyancy with unusual rapidity.

DR. SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR is compounded entirely from new articles of medicine, namely Gums.

Some idea of the strength of these gums may be formed when it is known that one bottle of the Invigorator contains as much strength as one hundred doses of Calomel, without any of its deleterious effects.

Though possessing rare medical powers, these Gums have been but little known to Physicians, and never used in their prescriptions until used in the form of the INVIGORATOR, which met with such unprecedented success as to induce the proprietor to offer it as a family medicine tried and known in its effects. It has rarely ever failed to cure LIVER Complaints in their worst forms.

INDIGESTION being caused by a deranged LIVER, is cured when the LIVER is excited to action.

JAUNDICE is caused by an improper action of the LIVER, and as a proof that the INVIGORATOR relieves this disease, let any one troubled with Jaundice take the Invigorator regularly one week, and their skin will begin to assume its original color.

COSTIVENESS can be permanently cured by the Invigorator. Take it to small doses on retiring and it assists nature in her operations. By using it daily the dose, the bowels are left in a healthy and active state, and work as regularly as clock work.

SICK HEADACHE is very soon relieved by taking a double dose of the INVIGORATOR, which corrects all acidity and soothes the stomach.

For an over-loaded stomach it has no equal as it relieves all oppressive or uneasy feeling after eating hearty. For a FAMILY MEDICINE generally, all who use it speak in the highest terms.

DR. SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR came to us recommended as a cure for Liver Complaints, and all diseases arising from a Diseased Liver. The testimonials of so many of our Physicians in its favor, induced us to try it, and now conviction forces us to say, it is one of the greatest blessings ever given to Dyspeptics for it made a complete cure before the first bottle was taken, and now can eat anything edible without trouble, while before nothing but the lightest food would digest. Now what we want to say to all our readers is, if LIVER COMPLAINTS or DYSPEPSIA trouble you, do not delay a day, this the greatest remedy in the world.—Sunday Mercury, San Francisco.

We take infinite pleasure in recommending this medicine as a preventative for FEVER and AGUE, CHILL FEVER, and FEVERS of a BILIOUS TYPE. It carries with certainty, and thousands are willing to testify to its wonderful virtues.

There has never been tried in our family a remedy which has met with such unbounded success in the cure of diseases incident to children, as DR. SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR; nor is it alone for diseases of child, as that we use it; for it acts so mildly and gently, and seems to renovate the system so thoroughly that we think we are doing a service to all in advising them to try it, who may stand needing, to try this remedy. There are cases that have come under our notice where great benefit has been received in diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels, when all other remedies failed to give relief. It had become so useful in our family that we will not be without it.—Jacksonville, Ala. Republican.

AYER'S Cathartic Pills,

(SUGAR COATED,)

ARE USED TO

CLEANSE THE BLOOD AND CURE THE SICK.

Invalids, Fathers, Mothers, Physicians, Philanthropists, read their Effects, and Judge of their Virtues,

FOR THE CURE OF

Headache, Sick Headache, Foul Stomach,

PHILADELPHIA, PA., May 1, 1856.

DR. J. C. AYER: Sir: I have been repeatedly cured of the worst headache and body ache by a dose or two of your Pills. It seems to arise from a foul stomach, which they cleanse at once. If they will cure others as they do me, the fact is worth knowing.

Yours with great respect, ED. W. PREBLE,
Clerk of Steamer Clarion.

Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaints.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
WASHINGTON, D. C., 7 Feb., 1856.

SIR: I have used your Pills in my general and family practice ever since you made them, and cannot hesitate to say they are the best cathartic we employ. Their regulating action on the liver is quick and decided, consequently they are an admirable remedy for derangements of that organ. Indeed, I have seldom found a case of bilious disease so obstinate that it did not readily yield to them.

Fraternally yours, ALONZO BALL, M. D.,
Physician of the Marine Hospital.

Dysentery, Relax, and Worms.

POST OFFICE, HARTLAND, LIV. CO., MICH., Nov. 16, 1855.

DR. AYER: Your Pills are the perfection of medicine. They have done my wife more good than I can tell you. She had been sick and pining away for months. Was off to be doctored at great expense, but got no better. She then commenced taking your Pills, which soon cured her, by expelling large quantities of worms (dead) from her body. They afterwards cured her and our two children of bloody dysentery. One of our neighbors had it bad, and my wife cured him with two doses of your Pills, while others around us paid from five to twenty dollars doctors' bills, and lost much time, without being cured entirely even then. Such a medicine as yours, which is actually good and honest, will be prized here.

GEO. J. GRIFFIN, Postmaster.

Indigestion and Impurity of the Blood.

From Rev. J. V. Himes, Pastor of Advent Church, Boston.

DR. AYER: I have used your Pills with extraordinary success in my family and among them. I am called to visit in distress. To regulate the organs of digestion and purify the blood they are the very best remedy I have ever known, and I can confidently recommend them to my friends. Yours, J. V. HIMES.

WARSAW, WYOMING CO., N. Y., Oct. 24, 1855.

DEAR SIR: I am using your Cathartic Pills in my practice, and find them an excellent purgative to cleanse the system, and purify the fountains of the blood.

JOHN G. MEACHAM, M.D.

Erysipelas, Scrofula, King's Evil, Tetter, Tumors, and Salt Rheum.

From a Forwarding Merchant of St. Louis, Feb. 4, 1856.

DR. AYER: Your Pills are the paragon of all that is great in medicine. They have cured my little daughter of ulcerous sores upon her hands and feet that had proved incurable for years. Her mother has been long grievously afflicted with blotches and pimples on her skin and in her hair. After our child was cured, she also tried your Pills, and they have cured her, ANNA MORGHOR.

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and Gout.

From the Rev. Dr. Hawks, of the Methodist Epis. Church.

PLANTERS HOUSE, SAVANNAH, GA., Jan. 1, 1856.

HONORED SIR: I should be ungrateful for the relief my skill has brought me if I did not report my case to you. A cold settled in my limbs and brought on excruciating neuralgic pains, which ended in chronic rheumatism. Notwithstanding I had the best of physicians, the disease grew worse and worse until, by the advice of your excellent agent in Baltimore, Dr. Mackenzie, I tried your Pills. Their effects were slow, but sure. By persevering in the use of them I am now entirely well.

SENATOR CHAMBER, BATON ROUGE, LA., 5 Dec, 1855.

DR. AYER: I have been entirely cured by your Pills of Rheumatic Gout—a painful disease—of which I suffered for years. VINCENT SLIDELL.

For Dropsy, Plethora, or kindred Complaints, requiring an active purge, they are an excellent remedy.

For Costiveness or Constipation, and as a Dinner Pill, they are agreeable and effectual.

Fits, Supression, Paralysis, Inflammation, and even Deafness, and Partial Blindness, have been cured by the alterative action of these Pills.

Most of the pills in market contain Mercury, which, although a valuable remedy in skilful hands, is dangerous in a public pill, from the dreadful consequences that frequently follow its incautious use. These contain no mercury or mineral substance whatever.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, INFLUENZA, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION,

and for the relief of consumptive patients in advanced stages of the disease.

We need not speak to the public of its virtues. Throughout every town, and almost every family in the American States, its wonderful cures of pulmonary complaints have made it already known. Nay, few are the families in any civilized country on this continent without some personal experience of its effects; and fewer yet the communities any where which have not some one among them suffering from the formidable and dangerous disease of the throat and lungs. While it is the most powerful antidote yet known to man for these formidable and dangerous disease of the pulmonary organs, it is also the plentiest and safest remedy that can be employed for infants and young persons. Parents should have it in store against the insidious enemy that steals upon them unprepared. We have abundant grounds to believe the CHERRY PECTORAL saves more lives by the early suspicions it prevents than those it cures. Keep it by you, and cure your colds while they are curable, nor suffer them until no human skill can master the incurable cankar that, fastened on the vitals, eats your life away. All know the dreadful fatality of lung disorders, and if they know too the virtues of this remedy, we need not say more than to assure them it is still made the best it can be. We spare no cost, no care, no toil to produce it the most perfect possible, and thus afford those who rely on it the best agent which our skill can furnish for their cure.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

TO all persons afflicted with Sexual Diseases, such as SPERMATORRHŒA, SEMINAL WEAKNESS, IMPOTANCE, GONORRHŒA, GLEET, SYPHILIS, the Vice of ONANISM, or Self Abuse, &c., &c.

The HOWARD ASSOCIATION, in view of the awful destruction of human life, caused by Sexual diseases, and the deceptions practised upon the unfortunate victims of such diseases by Quacks, have directed their Consulting Surgeon, as a CHARITABLE Act worthy of their name, to give MEDICAL ADVICE GRATIS, to all persons thus afflicted who apply by letter, with a description of their condition, (age, occupation, habits of life, &c.,) and in cases of extreme poverty and suffering, to FURNISH MEDICINE FREE OF CHARGE.

The Howard Association is a benevolent Institution, established by special act of Parliament, for the relief of the sick and distressed, afflicted with "Virulent and Epidemic Diseases." It has now a surplus of which the Director have voted to expend in advertising the above notice. It is needless to add that the Association commands the highest Medical skill of the age, and will furnish the most approved modern treatment.

Just Published, by the Association, a Report on Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, the vice of Onanism, Masturbation, or Self Abuse, and other Diseases of the Sexual Organs, by the Consulting Surgeon, which will be sent by mail, (in a sealed envelope) FREE OF CHARGE, on the receipt of Two Stamps for postage.

Address, Dr. GEO. R. CALHOUN, Consulting Surgeon, Howard Association, No. 2 South NINTH Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

By order of the Directors.

THE TECUMSEH NURSERY.

CHARLES STRONG, Proprietor.

The liberal encouragement heretofore extended to me, has enabled me from time to time to increase my stock of Nursery products, so that now I have not only one of the largest establishments in this State, but one which is excelled by none other in the quality of our plants. These considerations, together with that other one, moderation in prices, enable us to offer inducements, second to none, to those commencing the business, or buying to sell again. Every care is taken in the training and culture of my trees, while in the Nursery, to fit them properly for the hand of the Planter, regarding symmetry of proportion, and healthfulness of constitution as cardinal points. I would recommend my distant patrons to make their purchases in the Autumn for Spring sales, as it is decidedly the best Season.

Our packing, for which a charge barely covering the expense is always made, is done in the most faithful manner, my aim being to make my packages proof against even the recklessness of Railroad employees—more than this I don't think I can safely promise. Confident of this assurance, it may be pardoned in me to mention that the excellence of my packing has been publicly noticed in many papers, and that I rarely hear of injury to my Trees on arriving at their destination, even though they may have been long on the way.

The prices for the quantities specified in the annexed list must be understood to be literal and invariable, the rate per thousand not being admissable for any number of hundreds less—and they are based on the positive condition that the selections of varieties shall be left to ourselves; pledging ourselves, however, that the choice of our correspondents shall be complied with as nearly as may be, and that our selections be composed of the best leading sorts, or sorts, in due proportion, with more or less of the new popular kinds, according to our ability to supply them.

To Correspondents.

FIRST.—Write your Name, Place of Residence County and State, so legibly that it cannot be mistaken. Disappointments not attributable to us may otherwise ensue.

SECOND.—Give particular directions as to the mode, route or line, by which you would have your packages conveyed, and to whose care you would have them consigned. For want instruction in these particulars, we shall forward them according to the best of our judgment; and we expressly desire it to be understood that all responsibility on our part, as to the goods, ceases on delivering them to the forwarders Tecumseh, and that to the forwarders alone purchasers must look for all losses by detention, injury or miscarriage.

THIRD.—Inform us immediately of an error, omission or oversight, should any occur, when it shall be properly adjusted.

FOURTH.—Our terms of payment are Cash, or a satisfactory note or acceptance, payable at Bank. Remittance by Check or Draft, should always be made payable to our order.

Isabel.

BY GEO. D. PRENTICE.

Lost Isabel, again I come
To linger sad to weep,
Above the spot where wild flowers spring,
To mark thy place of sleep;
And, as I kneit beside thy urn,
Dear memories from afar
Come o'er my spirit, like the wild
Sweet music of a star!

The breezy step is seen no more
Upon the blue hill's brow,
And beauty's early light has left
My darkened day-dreams now;
Yet my lone spirit keeps its glow,
Like that pale eastern flower
That shines at midnight with the rays
It drank at morn's first hour.

Thou wast the sunlight of my days,
The idol of my dreams,
And life with thee was like the lapse
Of summer's quiet streams;
And if beneath the storms of life
My spirit e'er was bowed,
Thy love shone o'er the gathering gloom—
An angel of the cloud.

There is no star above my head,
No flower beneath my feet,
No gentle murmur on the air
Where winds and waters meet.
No liquid lull of twilight founts,
No song from field or grove,
But tells me of the pleasant paths
Where once we loved to rove.

Alas! The hours no longer near
Young beauty's rosy crown,
The gentle flowers look up thro' tears,
The stars thro' tears look down;
From all the boundless universe
The soul of joy is fled,
To live, ah! never, never more,
Since thou, sweet girl, art dead.

Dear Isabel, thine was the high
And holy gift of fire,
And beautiful its flashes played
Around thy glowing lyre;
But it consumed thy heart, for there
Its centered brightness fell,
And thou art but a thing of dust,
My own loved Isabel!

Twilight Musings.

BY SIGMA.

As I muse upon the visions
That before my thoughts arise,
While I sit beside my window
In the twilight of the skies
Darkness comes with solemn footstepe,
Like the Patriarch at even,
And the angels built their camp-fires
Round the battlements of heaven.

Gloomy shadows flit about me,
And my soul is overcast;
But the form of loved ones beckon
From the threshold of the past,
And their deeds of kindness brighten
All my thoughts with holy light,
Like the stars when sadly smiling
Through the cloudy wings of night.

Once again my mother greets me,
Her glad welcome in her eye,
And my father's hand is pressing
Mine, as in the days gone by;
And I hear a gentle sister
Singing through the summer long—
She has gone with them to heaven,
But she left on earth the song.

I again recall the conflicts
On the battlefield of life—
All the struggles and the sorrows
And the victories of the strife!
And I see the dead and living
In my dreamings, as the years
Roll their mingling memories o'er me,
Strangely blending smiles with tears.

Melancholy Musings.

Thou hast gone, bright, happy summer,
With thy green leaves, and thy flowers,
Gone with all thy glowing beauty,
Singing birds, and sunny hours;
Borne them hence a little season,
Till, with added joy and mirth,
They return again, with sweetness
To refresh the longing earth.

Even as the fond companions
Of my happiness, have passed,
As the flowers of hope and gladness,
Have been chilled by sorrow's blast,
Leaving the heart's garden desolate,
Unlighted by the ray
Of friendship, love, or happiness,
So hast Thou passed away.

And shall I be here when sunshine
Melts the frost of winter's reign?
Unlooks his binding fetters,
And breaks his icy chain?
When merry birds their songs renew,
Among the leafy bowers,
And pluck the first spring flowers?

Oh! who among the happy hearts
That beat so gaily now,
Will live to feel Spring's balmy breath,
Play o'er their cheek, or brow?
Who, who can measure length of days,
Or look through one short year,
To summers joyous coming,
And say, "I shall be here?"

Oh! many, many eyes will close,
Ere comes the sunny day,
And I, e'en I, may be of those
Who thus have passed away.
The flowers may o'er my ashes bloom,
The tall grass gently wave,
And Summer's winds a requim chant,
Above the orphan's grave.

'Tis a holy thought, and welcome
Be the quiet of the tomb!
My soul has known a darker night
Than e'en its heavy gloom!
Oh! who would cling to life, when all
It's hopes and joys are o'er,
And time, the flowers and sunshine,
Can never now restore?

Mass. M.

It is Morning with the Child.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

A mother sat, in tears, by the bed-side of her youngest born, and best beloved.—Six days had passed since the hand of fever was laid upon him, and, ever since, the life fountain had been drying up under the fervent heat. Many times daily had she entered into her closet and bowed before the Father of mercies, praying that the destroyer might pass her dwelling. But prayers and tears avail not. Steadily the disease kept on its fatal course, and now scarcely a hope remained. Friends gathered around, offering words of consolation; but they were only as idle murmurs in her ears.

"The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away. Blessed be the name of the Lord," said the good pastor, who, only a year before, had taken the sweet boy in his arms, and, in the presence of angels, touched his pure forehead with the water of baptism.

But the mother made no sign. She could not accept the affliction as a blessing—she could not offer up thanks. Her very life was bound up in the life of her child, and the thought of seperation was so terrible that no place for consolation was in her grieving spirit.

"It is apointed unto man once to die," added the minister, still seeking to penetrate the mother's heart, and pour in oil, and wine; "we must all pass by this way—must all enter this valley—must all go down into the dark river. How much better, then, to die in the morning of life, ere sunbeams have drank the fragrant dews, or the green leaves have withered on the sapless branches."

Still the mother made no sign.

"You will have a treasure in heaven, and where the treasure is, there will the heart be also."

But all availed not. The tears fell like rain.

Sadly, at length the minister turned away, and left the weeping mother with her friends; for her ears were closed to all words of consolation he could offer.

An hour later, and the mother still bent over the frail body of her little one. There was no hope in her heart, for she saw upon his face the signet mark of the death angel. One only friend remained with her, and, until now, this friend had offered no word of comfort. The grieving mother was bending over the pillow upon which the sick child lay, and gazing down upon the countenance she was soon to see no more, when she felt a hand laid gently upon her own, and with a touch that sent a new impulse throbbing through the heart.

"It is very dark, here, sometimes," said the friend, very softly, very tenderly, and with a meaning in her voice beyond that contained in the words she had uttered.

The mother answered only by a returning pressure of the hand.

"Even the light of this world is darkened when compared with the light of heaven. Here the best and most highly favored do little more than grope their way. There every one walks in noon-day clearness."

She had gained the mother's ear. Her words had gone inward to the region of thought.

"I have passed through these deep waters, my friend," she continued, "and have heard their terrible roaring. I have held my dying babe in my arms, and clung to it with an agony of grief that seemed as if it would snap my very heart strings. But after the keenness of the affliction was over, I had this consolation, and it has remained ever since—when the night with me was the darkest, it was morning with my child. Yet, it was then that the morning broke on him which was never to go down in the night. Oh, how often, and often, since, when I have walked in darkness, have I thanked God, with a true heart, fervently, that it was morning with my child!"

The mother's tears ceased to fall, and she turned her wet eyes upon her friend, and looked into her face earnestly.

"There is one question," said the friend after a pause, "that every mother should ask herself. It is this—'how do I love my child—selfishly, or unselfishly?' If unselfishly, then whatever is best for the child, will give to her heart the deepest pleasure. I had a dream on the very night my precious one was taken from me. I believed that it was imaged to my fancy while sleeping, by a loving angel that was sent to comfort me in my great affliction. There had always been something very fearful to me in the idea of dying here, and awaking to consciousness in a new and strangely different existence; and the thought followed my child. That dream was to me a revelation, and as such I accepted it thankfully. I saw, in my sleep, two scenes—the one contrasting with the other, as we sometimes see them in pictures. One scene represented the saddest of my life experiences. I saw myself sitting in darkness and in tears, as you sit now, my friend and sister, bending over my precious babe, clinging to it as the miser clings to his gold—ay, and with an intense passion. But only a veil dropped down between that scene and another, which quickly chained my vision and caused my heart, heavy with grief, to throb with a new-born pleasure. An angel, in form like a chaste young virgin, was clasping to her besom a babe, in all the ecstasy of a new-born joy. No mother, when she feels upon her breast the first pressure of her first babe, ever felt more delight than I saw pictured in the face of the angel as she held my babe to her loving heart. Yes, my babe, just born into heaven, and given into her care by the Divine Father of us all.

"For a time I withdrew my eyes from the face of the angel. Never had I gazed upon a countenance so full of love, so radiant with celestial beauty. And the babe nestled on her bosom as lovingly as it had ever nestled on mine. From this scene, after gazing upon it until tears ran down my cheeks—tears of gratitude that it was so well with my babe, I turned to look at the darker one—at the sorrowing earthly mother and the suffering child!—Poor babe! Wasted with sickness and writhing in mortal pain. How yearningly and pityingly my heart felt toward it, and I prayed for its deliverance. Even as the words went up from my heart, the darker scene faded until it became no longer visible; but the brighter one remained. When I awoke, and grief for my great loss revived in my heart, I recalled the precious dream, and took comfort. What if I did walk in darkness?—It was morning—eternal morning—with my child!"

As the mother listened, to her mind was also pictured two scenes. Her tears had ceased to flow, and her countenance showed a visible interest. A little while she sat musing, and then as she turned her eyes full of tenderness upon her sick boy, she said:

"Oh, it is hard, very hard, to give him up! How can I do it? How can I resign him even to the care of an angel?"

The friend said no more. Her words had found a way into the heart of the sorrowing one, and she left them to do their work.

A little later, and the hour of deepest darkness came—the hour of separation.

Over the mother's spirit a pall of deepest gloom was spread. The friends words had faded from her memory. She saw not the beautiful beyond, but gazed only upon a dark, gloomy abyss, into which her precious one was about falling, while she stood helpless by. Willingly would she have died, that she might go with her child along the unknown path, and shield him from its terrors. Over him she bent, seeing nothing, hearing nothing, caring for nothing but her boy; while darker and closer shadows gathered around her. It was night—dark, cold, moonless night—with the grieving mother.

For more than an hour the child had lain in a deep stupor, but it was evident that life was gradually ebbing away, and that the last agony would soon be over. For her the mother had almost ceased to grieve, and feelings were centered in her child, about passing alone through the gates of death, alone to meet the realities of the unseen world.

Suddenly a light fell upon the wan, suffering face, a smile played around the white lips, the eyes, long closed, and heavy with pain and fever, flew open; and glancing upward with a glad expression, the child said:

"Good morning, mama!"

"Good morning, love!" answered the startled mother, scarcely thinking of the words she uttered.

"Good morning!" repeated the child, still gazing upward, with a new and heavenly beauty in its countenance. "Oh, it is morning now!"

Fixed was that look for several moments—then the fringing lids drooped slowly, until they lay softly upon the pure white cheeks. The parted lips closed but the smile remained. The hands, lifted for a moment in glad surprise, fell over the placid breast, and all was still, and holy, and beautiful.

"Yes, it is morning now," whispered the friend in the mother's ear, as she sat like one entranced gazing upon the pulseless form before her, which, as if touched by an enchanter's wand, had suddenly changed from an image of suffering into one of tranquil beauty.

And it was morning with the child, a heavenly morning, and morning, also, with the mother, for a new light had dawned upon her, and a new faith in the hereafter. The dark valley was suddenly bridged with light, and she saw her precious one by angel guides led safely over.

"God careth for these jewels," said the friend, a few hours afterward. "They are precious in his sight, not one of them is lost. His love is tenderer even than a mother's love. We may trust them in his hands with unfaltering confidence. Yes, yes, grieving mother, it is indeed morning with your babe."

The Truth of the Matter.

That was what was wanted, and in default of that, there sat Justice King, and stared at the parties, and the parties stared at Justice King, and the reporters and lookers-on stared at one or the other, and the wheels of the Police Court stood still. "And that's the truth of the matther, yer Honor; God save yer soul in glory," said Mrs. Lanty Mac——(five or six stout syllables omitted as too long, and too fervent to be written,) in a red cloak and double-quilted hood, with the frills and quills of a snow-white linen cap-border furnishing a setting to her rubicund features, which shone all the brighter by the contrast. And Mrs. Lanty Mac—— looking frowningly down on Mr. Lanty Mac—— a spare despairing, deprecatory looking man by her side, as if to bring him in, willy nilly, to her support in the statement, by a glance which spoke volumes, but particularly this, "Deny it, if ye dare."

Lanty Mac—— was the defendant in the case of "City, vs Lanty Mac——, for abusing his wife, his spouse the prosecuting witness, and fully in costume and character for the part of the "Red Avenger" of her own wrongs, stood the dame, her cap-border quivering with the emphasis of her utterance.

Lanty Mac—— was arrested for abusing his wife, kicking the baby, tipping over the breakfast table, and raising a general bobbery in the Mac—— family shanty, and Mrs. Lanty had just given in her testimony capping her climax with the solemn asservation already narrated, and closing with the fervent appeal, as set down, for the safety and welfare of the more etherial part of Justice King, a skillful kind of finishing nail chosen by the fair, but would-be-injured mistress Lanty.

A bright thought hit Justice King.—We don't say which struck first, but there was a collision, a striking out of a mental scintillation.

"Lanty, tell your own story."

Mrs. Lanty in her red cloak and quilted bonnet and cap border, fell back and gazed on her better half, who certainly, in comparison with his burly spouse, seemed less than three-tenths. She looked at him threateningly.

"An' if ye dare—"

"Hush, Madam, he dare tell the truth; go ahead Lanty."

Lanty drew his threadbare little sleeve across his little red nose, and in the littlest of trebles struck the key note of his family troubles:

"An' your honor, its meeself that's heart-broken and abused intirely, clane gone, and by the same token usthed up forever. [Expressive pantomine on the part of Mrs. Lanty.] An its me life that isn't worth a shtraw, not the doost ov the earth; — bate her is it? and kick the baby was it that she charged ov me? when its herself that's always bating me, and making me life miserable and me comfort clane gone; more shame that I say it.

"I was ating me bit ov mate paceable like this morning. Sorra a word did she spake, an—an—[tremblingly] its the divils own timper she has intirely—but to scoold and rave. Sez she, 'Lanty, take the brat;' an I tuk it, an it cried; I sed 'Husha-' 'Husha yerself,' sez she, 'if that's the way ye tend the childer,' and wi' that she brought me a clip on the head wi' the ladle. And being startled like, I drapped the baby, d'ye see, and thin—"

"Then what?"

"An thin I shtruck her jist jintly, but, by the powers, I stood no chance at all. It was a click in the eye wi' the pertater dish, and a bang on the head wi' a mop stick; and she crying 'Murther, Murther,' as though it was not meeself that was being murdered, musha. And the police came and tuk me; and here I am. Foine me, yer honor, for the love of God; sind me to Bridewell, niver to live wi' her agin."

Justice King thought the truth of the matter was all in hand, and gave Mr. and Mrs. Lanty Mac—— a wholesome supply of good counsel, advising them to abstain in future from broils and jars.

And Mrs. Lanty Mac—— took her spouse home. We doubt whether the police were called in again, but we greatly fear that Lanty has ere this paid for the temerity of his speech in yesterday's Police Court.

Poor Lanty.

"So Tired!"

BY MARY W. STANLEY GIBSON.

Weary of life! ah no—but of life's woes;
Weary of its troubles and its cares!
Willing to rest—because so well I know
What draughts the hand of passion still prepares!

"So tired!"

A little child came panting in from play, the other night, and climbing into his mother's lap laid its head upon her bosom, and then uttered those two little words. I saw the fond young mother brush the golden hair from the darling's moist forehead, and press her lips again and again to the flushed cheeks. The shadows of evening were falling fast around us, and the birds had already sung themselves to sleep. Little shoes and stockings were drawn off and laid aside—little weary feet bathed and cooled—a little night dress took the place of the pretty blue frock and white apron, and the boy was quiet. With a sigh of satisfaction he nestled closer in her arms; his blue eyes closed, and her cradle song grew lower and lower as his breath came longer and more regularly through his parted lips. Happy sleep of childhood! She rose and went softly to her own room, to lay him in his little crib, and I was left alone. Heaven knows what memory of a time when I, too, was cradled upon a loving breast—when the dead mother, whose face I cannot remember, sang so to me in the twilight—came over me as I took up the infant's cry.

"So tired!"

A man of business—a man whose name is a bond on Wall street. Why should he lean his head upon his hand and sigh as the words fall from his lips? Tired of his gay and busy life, of his elegant home, his fair daughters, and his fashionable wife? Tired of all those, and longing for the little red farm-house up among the hills of his native home, where he used to play, a bare-footed, light-hearted boy?—Even so, strange as it may seem! Yet not so much for the farm-house, as for the happiness and innocence that staid behind it, and which he can never hope to find in his dusty office, or his splendid home.

"So tired!"

She has been a loving wife and an indulgent mother. Six strong sons has she reared beside the cottage hearth, but the grave has claimed them all but two; and those the world taken. The husband of her youth died long ago; and to-day, her sixtieth birth-day, she sits alone in the deserted homestead. To her boys she is "the old woman," to their brilliant wives "a good old thing, but so old fashioned;" to their homes and their children almost a stranger. Her tears fall as she thinks of them in the distant city, gay, prosperous, wealthy and happy, yet not remembering her, on this day, even by a line, to say, "dear mother, I love you." This is her reward for years of toil, and care, and anxiety. She has outlived her generation, and when she dies, she will hardly be missed by those to whom she has given health and strength, and life itself. Poor, lonely old woman! Well may the bitter tears fall fast—well may you long to die! For this is often the return for love and devotion that have outwatched the stars, and seen the moon grow pale!

"So tired!"

Yes, turn from the brilliant crowd that listen eagerly for every word you utter fair songstress, and heed what your heart is saying. Words of fire may fall from your rapid pen—your own wild soul may stamp its impress upon the page before you—the world may place the crown of laurel upon your bowed head—but it will be a diadem of thorns. In the height of triumph—in the fever of success—there will come a sudden pause, and the iron will enter your soul as you remember that one voice is silent, and one face still, calm and cold. Fame, wealth, success—oh! what are these to happiness? Vanity—vanity all, and "vexation of spirit," and you bow your head and weep to think that it should be so!

Oh! little child, not yet released from thy mother's care, it would be better for thee to sleep into the tranquil sleep of death, within the shelter of her arms, than to tread the path which we are treading! There are sharp thorns hidden among the fairest flowers—there are treacherous quicksands in the sweetest valley. God help thee boy, for only a hand from Heaven can lead thee safely there. The golden hair will turn to silver, it may be, and the blue eyes will wear an anxious look before the painful journey is half done, and evil shapes will mock and mutter when thy heart faileth thee, and thy steps are faint.

"So tired!"

My boy, cling closer to thy mother's breast! For a day will surely come when thy lips will utter those self-same words, and she will not be beside thee, to hush thee into forgetfulness of all thy trouble. God help thee, then and lead thee to the only refuge "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest!"

We Shall not be Waiting Long.

We shall not be waiting long,
I hear the clock strike seven,
We shall hear his footstep soon
Down the dusky street he'll come;
Draw the arm chair in the corner,
Fly it, lay his slippers down;
Make the fire burn brighter, warmer
For Father's coming home.

We shall not be waiting long,
We shall see his shadow fall,
When he leaves the weary throng
Upon the old Church wall;
Light the lamps upon the table
Put the tea into the urn,
Harry, put aside the marbles
For Father's coming home.

We shall not be waiting long,
Bring the Bible from its nook,
Here's a leaf already turned
Where rested last his look:
Range the Chairs around the stand
Draw the curtains closely down,
The ship has neared the strand
And Father's coming home.

We shall not be waiting long
The street lamps lightly shine,
Soon he will surely come,
The clock hands point to nine;
The winds, wailing dly round us,
The waves are capped with foam,
And Angels, swell the chorus
My Father's going home.

We shall not be waiting long,
Deaths seal is on his brow
They have brought the looked for form
But his voice is silent now;
On his grave the dew drops glisten,
O'er his pillow flowers have sprung,
Yet still we watch and listen,
We shall not be waiting long. H H S.

Ten Thousand Miners Wanted

We hope it will be borne in mind in these "hard times," that the Galena lead mines are among the richest and most productive mines in the world—that the quantity of lead ore is inexhaustible, and only wants the labor to "bring it to light"—that mine at is worth thirty dollars per thousand, in sovereigns, as soon as it is on the top of the ground.—The suspension of the work on all the railroads in the country, and the general depression of all the great interests must throw tens of thousands of men out of employment. We say to them all, come to our lead mines—take your spades, picks and gads, and go to "digging." Within fifteen miles of Galena, 10,000 men can profitably employ themselves in mining the coming winter The price of living will be down to the lowest point, and a miner's outfit for the winter will cost but a trifle. Let no man complain of want of employment so long as our hills and valleys abound in lead ore, only awaiting the hand of industry to be converted into gold.—Galena Adv., Oct 6th.

A Mysterious and Tragic Affair

About five weeks since, a young and prepossessing girl, who gave her name as Albright, called at the residence of Mrs. Talbot, near the corner of Elm and Ninth street, and applied for a situation in the family Mrs. T. being in want of a domestic, and at the same time forming a favorable opinion of the applicant, at once engaged her, upon which the girl, sending for her trunk, became regularly inducted into the family. Time passed on, and she performed the offices for which she was engaged faithfully and vigilantly, until Mrs Talbot, in conversation with some of her female friends, declared that she had never been so well pleased with a girl before. During the latter part of last week she was taken sick, but pertinaciously refused to allow the family to send for a physician, until the symptoms becoming alarming, a doctor was called in, who discovered that she was in premature labor, occasioned by medicines which she had taken to procure an abortion. All that medicine could effect was had recourse to, but in vain, the remedy came too late, and she expired. Mrs Talbot, who had learned the name of her relations, who reside in the interior of the State, despatched a letter with the intelligence of her death to them, and the day after the burial, her brother arrived in the city and took charge of her effects. Upon opening her trunk, there was found upwards of $500 in coin, besides other valuable property. Mrs. Talbot was somewhat startled by an exclamation from her brother, thanking God she was no more, and upon demanding an explanation, she was informed that the girl had, ever since she had emerged from childhood, brought disgrace upon her family. Naturally depraved, she had consorted only with thieves and strumpets, and at the time of her death ther was a reward offered by the State for her complicity in aiding the escape of two convicts from the penitentiary. It would appear from this that she had hired herself as a servant in order to lie in perdu until time had made the search for her less keen, but she has been called to answer at a higher tribunal for her misdeeds.—Cincinnati Com.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1857.

Our County Fair.

Both of the days appointed for the holding of the Lenawee County Fair were beautifully clear and pleasant, and we believe that both with regard to its receipts and the attendance, it fully equalled the expectations of its friends.

We learn from the Watchtower, that the whole number of entries for Exhibition were 793, of which 105 were horses, 97 cattle, 166 vegetables and seeds, and 100 fruits. This was 200 more in number than those of the last year. The whole number of premiums awarded was $255, and the total receipts $689,40.

The fair was held about half a mile south-west from the R. R Depot, and we think that all present were satisfied that it was a vast improvement on the open common of last year We do not think the grove quite equal to ours at Tecumseh, but still it was a very great relief from the broad glare of an October sun The ground was rather cramped and crowded, but this can hardly be called the fault of the committee, but rather of the times, for they would amply have accommodated the attendance of last year.

The pleasant weather no doubt did much to increase the attendance, but we think the liberal arrangements which the committee made with the Rail Road Company, and by which they lost nothing, but really subserved their own interest in granting, with regard to half fare tickets, did more This has heretofore been strangely neglected, to the serious detriment, as we have all along insisted, of the Society.

We see that the Watchtower more than half intimates that the attendance, and exhibition would have been still larger but for the existence of local and Town fairs in the county. If this is intended to refer to the Northern Lenawee Society, we think that the fact that more than half of the entries from the whole twenty towns in the County, to the County Fair, came from the five Northern Towns comprising this society, and that eight full car loads of citizens, three on the first, and five on the second day, besides, an immense number of loaded wagons and carriages, came from these northern towns to attend it, more than sufficiently controverts this supposition.

The fact is, that so long as everything is conducted equitably and harmoniously, the organization and support of township Societies has precisely the opposite effect They are the main stay and reliable support of the County Society, just as the County Societies, are the foundation and support of the State Society. It is true that in some departments there was not so full an exhibition as might readily have been made. There were fewer fowls, sheep, and swine, than might have been expected, but such as were presented we thought very good, but the Floral Hall, and the exhibition of Fruit, Horses, and Cattle has not, we think as yet been exceeded in the county of Lenawee, and that is saying a good deal. There were also some very fine samples of the Chinese Sugar Cane. Molasses, manufactured in the county, which gave us the almost certain assurance of being able before the close of another season, to manufacture not only our own Molasses, but also, in the main our own Sugar. When this shall be done it will indeed be the commencement of a new era in the Agriculture of Lenawee County, and of a proud independence on the part of her citizens.

EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS CONVENTION.—We very much regretted that an engagement in another direction prevented our attendance upon this Convention at Jackson on Thursday of last week, a condensed report of which will be found in another column.

The Convention embraced a two-fold object, one pertaining to the Editors, and the other to the publishers of newspapers. We shall look forward with interest to the adjourned meeting which is to be held in Detroit in December next, and hope that nothing will prevent a full and general attendance of the representatives of the Press at that time.

☞ Our respected Townsman, Mr. James, has advices of the death of Marshall James, a Nephew, a Captain of the 28th regiment, East India Company's service. A mutiny broke out during Divine service, and as the officers left the building they were shot down, the remainder of the officers with their wives and families, took shelter in a Fort near, and in a few days were all murdered, men, women and children, by the mutineers of the 41st regiment. Capt. James' wife and child fortunately have been in England some time.

J. M. Griswold, of Lansing and T. F. Bouton, of Jackson, Vice Presidents.

M. D. Hamilton, of Detroit, and D. C. Ireland, of Coldwater, Secretaries.

On motion, the following persons were appointed a business committee.

1st District—C V DeLand, Henry Barns.
2d District—T S Clark, J L Gantt.
3d District—Geo A Fitch, A Valentine.
4th District—J Griswold, H J Alvord.

In order to give the business committee time to transact their business, the convention then adjourned until 7 o'clock in the evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The convention met at 7 o'clock, P M, pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by the President, Z B. Knight.

The following new members were reported present.

I. W. Van Fossen, Paw Paw Free Press.

J. L. Hackstaff, White Pigeon Era.

The Business Committee reported thro' their Chairman, Mr. DeLand, the following

CONSTITUTION.

1st. The undersigned, publishers and editors of the State of Michigan, hereby organize themselves into an association, under the name of the "Michigan Press Association."

2d. The object of this association shall be to combine the publishers and editors of this State, for the regulation and protection of our business interests, the reform of all evils which may exist in the management of newspaper enterprise, and the cultivation of a mutual acquaintance and common interest as conductors of public journals.

3d. The officers of this Association shall consist of a President, two Vice Presidents, a Recording and Corresponding Secretary, who shall be elected by ballot, and hold their offices for one year

4th. The regular meetings of this association shall be held annually on the first Thursday of December in each year

5th. Any publisher or editor (of this State) may become a member of this association by signing the constitution and complying with all the rules and regulations of the association.

6th. This association may elect, as honorary members, such persons as may heretofore have been publishers, or editors of newspapers in the State.

7th. This constitution may be altered or amended at any meeting of this association.

On motion, the Constitution was accepted, and after some little discussion was adopted without amendment.

The Business Committee also reported the following preamble and resolution.

Whereas, The publishing interests of this State have been seriously and almost fatally injured by an indiscriminate credit system, and the history of most of the journals of this State showing thousands of dollars on the loss side of their ledgers; and, whereas, we consider it eminently fit and proper that some radical reform for our own protection should be adopted, we therefore, as publishers and editors of this State, in convention assembled, do hereby mutually pledge ourselves to the maintainance of the following resolutions.

1st. Resolved, That we deem it imperative and that we will require payment in advance for all newspaper subscriptions received hereafter.

2d. Resolved, That all transient and foreign advertising should be paid in advance, or secured to be paid by a responsible agent, and at the same rates paid for other advertising.

3d. Resolved, That we will not advertise for any newspaper or periodical on terms different from those required of commercial and business men

4th. Resolved, That we deprecate the practice of supplying inadequate journeymen and runaway apprentices, believing that it is the cheapest and most honorable to employ only good workmen at fair and living prices

5th. Resolved, That we recommend to the craft in different localities, the adoption of scales of prices for job work and advertising to be adhered to in the transaction of such business.

6th. Resolved, That the editors of the several journals in this State are invited to forward to the Recording Secretary as complete a history of the press in their respective counties, with such other matters of interest pertaining to the craft, as they may think proper.

After being read, the preamble and resolutions were taken up separately and severally adopted.

Mr. Woolnough, of Battle Creek, offered the following:

Resolved, That the practice, now very frequent, of inserting quack medicine and and other advertisements in the reading or editorial columns of the country press, is one calculated to perpetrate a fraud upon the reader, is a growing evil, and that we will abandon it. Adopted.

Mr. Woolnough moved that a committee of three be appointed to recommend some regulations in regard to apprentices

The motion was carried, and the President appointed Messrs. Woolnough, Griswold and DeLand, to report at the next meeting of the Convention.

Mr. Woolnough offered the following:

Resolved, That the meeting of this Association to be held on the first Thursday in December next, to be held at the city of Detroit—that it be called at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M., of that day, and that all the editors and publishers in the State are requested to be present on that occasion Adopted.

Mr. F. T. Eddy offered the following:

Resolved, That this Convention return their thanks to the agent and officers of the State Prison for their courteous invitation to visit that institution, and for the kindness and attention displayed while there. Adopted.

Resolved, That we are under obligations to the officers of the Jackson Co. Agricultural Society for their generosity in allowing the fraternity the privileges of the grounds. Adopted

Mr Henderson offered the following:

Resolved, That the thanks of the members of the Convention be extended to the members of the Jackson Press, for their courteous treatment of their fellow craftsmen, in attendance at this Convention Adopted.

Mr. DeLand offered the following:

Resolved, That all Publishers and Editors in this State are requested to publish the proceedings of this Convention, and those not already members are requested to authorize the Secretary to enter their names as such. Adopted.

It was moved and supported, that the election of permanent officers of the Association be postponed until the December meeting. Carried.

The Convention then adjourned to meet in Detroit, on the 1st Thursday in December next.

ATTEMPT TO SHOOT HIS WIFE-SHOCKING CASE OF SELF DESTRUCTION.—Coroner Parmenter, of Newburg, held an inquest, upon the body of Ezra Underhill who committed suicide by shooting himself with a pistol. It appears that deceased and his wife seperated on the 20th of April last, previous to which time they had lived very unhappily together, the principal cause being jalousy on his part. Since the seperation Mrs. Underhill and her two children have lived with the Father of the deceased, in Newburgh.

The deceased obtained from Conrad Dodzast, in Colden street; the loan of a double barreled pistol, which Mr D. loaded for him, and learned that his wife was at the house of a Mrs Coon, proceeded to the residence of that lady, and after considerable difficulty obtained entrance into the house. He presented the pistol at his wife, which luckily missed fire. In about ten minutes after his ejection the report of a pistol was heard. It is not supposed that he attempted to destroy himself, but that he was lurking near the house waiting for his wife to come out, intending to shoot her. Under this impression Mrs Coon and Underhill cautiously left the house in quest of aid, which was procured, and the unfortunate man was found dead at the back door of the residence of his wife having shot himself through the head.

SUDDEN AND SINGULAR DEATHS.—On Tuesday Coroner Madden, of Troy, was called to East Poestenkill to hold inquest on the bodies of Sarah E. Horton and Mary Horton, wife and daughter of Gen P. Horton, inn keeper at that place. The circumstances attending the deaths, as proved before the Coroner's jury are somewhat remarkable and affecting. The child, about two months old, was left by its mother, in a sound sleep, on the bed, while she went to a neighbor's. On the mother's return, she sent the servant girl to the bed room to take up the child. The servant girl immediately returned and told Mrs H. that the child was dead This intelligence so affected the mother that she at once frothed at the mouth and died in twenty minutes.

The child was not in full health, but still was not considered sick The death doubtless occured in a fit. Mrs H. was perfectly well, and in a better flow of spirits than usual.

A post mortem examination on Mrs. H. was made by Dr. Hull, of Berlin.—Death appeared to be produced by a sudden congestion of the lungs caused by excitement The jury rendered a verdict to this effect.—Alb. Exp.

Financial.

The New York Tribune of Saturday says "The disasters in the financial and mercantile circles continue. Several important failures are announced to day—Messrs P. Chouteau, jr. & Co., and Powell, Ramsdell & Co., and several banks in the interior have been thrown out. The Stock market shows a further decline, and railroad values appear to be almost entirely destroyed. Notwithstanding the advices from the East were encouraging, a very gloomy feeling existed in the street, with no alleviation at the close. The non-arrival of the Star of the West increases the uneasy feeling, although her owners do not consider her due until Sunday.

It will be seen from an extract from the money article of Saturday's N Y. Herald, that that paper advocates the policy of allowing the commercial and mercantile community to go by the board in order to save the banks. It seems to be very clear that one or other must go under and the Herald says it is better that hundreds of the merchants should fail, than that the banks should suspend. A business man in our city who left New York on Saturday, states that it is the general impression in business circles in New York that the above policy will be pursued. The same gentleman informs us (and so the Herald states) that Friday was the most gloomy day experienced in New York within the past six months.—All the panics experienced were as nothing compared to it. At the first board there was a frightful stampede and the best stocks were slaughtered right and left, the falling off being from ½ to 7 per cent. The following is the extract from the Herald alluded to above:

The position of our banks is a matter for calm and serious consideration. This month and next is the time for our heaviest payments, and we must look for such times in the financial world as have never before been seen or imagined The banks have a dangerous and difficult part to perform during the next sixty days, and if they play it properly the future will be full of hope. The resolution purporting to have been passed by the managers of these institutions, amounts to just nothing at all. It was only partially agreed to, and not sufficiently official to be binding. It was intended more for fancy than for fact, and it is our impression that the next returns will show that it has not been carried out. The banks in this city cannot expand and preserve their positions as specie paying institutions. Their only safety is in contraction. The banks of New England must suspend. We do not see how they can avoid it; but the banks of this city can sustain themselves if they will adhere to the policy they have for some weeks pursued. Nothing else can save them. The banks must now show the community that they have in reality no soul, and they must not flinch an instant from the awful responsibility resting upon them. An expansion would lead to an immediate drain upon our specie reserve, and stop at once the current of specie now resting into their vaults.—An expansion would temporarily relieve the community, but it would end in suspension of specie payment by the banks. Better hundreds upon hundreds of our merchants should fail than our banks suspend. It is a distressing alternative, but we see no help for it. With our banks firm and fixed as specie paying institutions the country may recover from this revulsion in a few months, whereas a suspension of specie payments would prostrate every important interest, from which we should not recover in years It is hard, and may seem cruel that the commercial community should be sacrificed to preserve our banking institutions, but it is necessary to act so as to guarantee the greatest good to the greatest number.—Our banks must not look now to individual cases, but to the cammunity at large. A few must be sacrificed—immolated, if necessary, to preserve the masses We are aware that in advocating these measures we meet the condemnation of many but we do not head that, in pursuing the general object in view. The managers of our banks seem to be at last fully awake to tue dangers and difficulties of their position, and we wish to assure them of the support and countenance of the public in a steady adherence to the course they have marked out for the immediate future. We are willing to abide by the result

EXTENSIVE ROBBERY IN GENESEE COUNTY.—The wind up of the County Fair of Genesee County, which passed off gloriously, on Thursday, was somewhat disastrous to certain of its citizens During the night, eleven houses, situated on what is called Flushing Street, a farming district on the road leading to a Township of that name, were entered by burglars, and the linen, spoons, and other valuable articles taken off. Mr. Hyslop, a worthy farmer lost $800,00 in gold, and a span of fine horses, buggy and harness. The horses had taken the first premium on that, day, and he had received an offer of $900 for them. The robbers were seen to pass the Flint toll gate at 5 o'clock, A. M., and were traced as far as Grand Blanc.

The Collins Steamer Atlantic, from Liverpool, at 4 P. M. the 30th ult., arrived at 10:30 A. M., to-day.

The Asia from New York, arrived Liverpool on the 29th.

The Gen. Williams, from Portland arrived in the morning and the Kangaroo in the afternoon of the 20th.

The India mail with Calcutta dates of August 22d, Bombay 21st and Delhi 2th, had arrived.

Delhi was still in the hanns of the insurgents. A good deal of skirmishing had taken place; the Rebels being invariably defeated, but with considerable loss to the British.

Gen. Nicholson arrived before Delhi on the 8th of August, in advance of his force, which was expected between the 13th and 15th, when the number of besegers would amount to 11,000 men. Further reinforcements were looked for, early in September, increasing it to 15,000. The assault was expected to take place on the 20th of August.

The account in regard to Gen. Havelock and the position of affairs at Cawnpore are conflicting. According to one statement, the General after marching a second time towards Lucknow and defeating the enemy in two engagements found the rebels to number 15,000 strongly entrenched at Lucknow, and had to fall back upon Cawnpore, where reduced to only 900 followers, he was expecting an attack from the insurgents. The Trieste correspondent of the London Morning Post, telegraphs that Gen. Neil had attacked and defeated a large force near Cawnpore and that Gen. Havelock had succeeded in reaching Lucknow, the garrison of which has been in a most precarious condition.

Agra dates to the 11th—All in the fort were amply provided with provisions but the force was weak, and calling frequently for relief. The whole Christian population was within the fort Bithour was re-occupied by four thousand mutineers, but on the 16th of August, attacked and carried the position.—The most loyal spirit prevailed among the Sikh soldiers, and the population of the Punjaub. From most of the native states of Central India the accounts are satisfactory, although in some instances dissatisfaction had broken out The rebels at Arrah had been defeated by Major Eyre. The Mohrrum holiday as to which fears were felt, had passed off quietly. A few more mutinies amongst the troops of the Bombay presidency are reported. They were generally easily suppressed. Several suspected regiments were disbanded. It is reported that Goolobsing died at Cashmere on the second of August, Lord Elgin was about to return to China—Gen Loyd had been suspended and was to be brought to trial. Martial law had been proclaimed at Delhi.

Paris papers contain a rumor that serious dissensions existed between Lord Canning Governor General and Sir Colin Campbell, the Commissioner in Chief of the army. Lord Elgin had sided with the latter, who was also supported by public opinion.

The report of Havelock having reached Lucknow was doubted, and his position was regarded as a precarious one

An officer reports that he saw the end of Reenah Sahib and a family, who took to a boat on the Ganges and were swamped

A telegraph despatch from Paris to the London Post, dated Sept 29th, says that the population is beginning to rise in Bengal, pursuing and killing English settlers, and that the revolution was becoming general. Merchandize from the interior no longer reaches Calcutta, and the imports are accumulating in the depots. Money is disappearing, and the paper of the East India Co. is at 20 per cent discount.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14

The aspect of affairs is decidedly more cheerful. Merchants, Bankers &c. look upon the suspension of the banks as a relief. There is a run upon the Savings Banks

Who that is troubled with any of those disagreeable Complaints, such as Jaundice, Dyspepsia or Liver Disease of any kind, but would like to know of a remedy for these unseemingly visitations? We feel that we are doing our invalid readers an invaluable service, if we can induce them to get a bottle of Dr. Sanfords Invigorator, and take it, for we know from personal experience that it is one of the greatest remedies for general debility, and consequent inactive bodily powers ever before used. Its action is so perfect and complete as to give relief the first time taken, and if it does to others as it has to us, half a bottle will be all that is needed. We know of nothing we can recommend with such confidence, as a family medicine, as the Invigorator.

Dr. Baumback in his travels on the cape of Good Hope says: I found very frequently among the Dutch Boors of the back country, AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which they keep hung up by a throng around the neck of the bottle to a peg over their hammocks. Indeed this seems to be their sole protection against the throat and lung disorders which are quite prevalent among them. I thought it a speaking comment on the practical genius of the American people, that they should furnish the staple, I believe the only remedy this people buy to use. Asking if they used the same manufacturers Pills, they told me that better purgatives grew all around them than any ever could prepare.

I have tried during Nineteen Years of my life the various modes of doing business.

Firstly for Cash.
Secondly on Short Credit.
Thirdly, had to take Long Credit, Orders and Accounts.

Lastly, I have been compelled to wait for payment of Goods sold on Six Months time, long enough for a man to visit California, get rich, and return, before payment could be forced or coaxed.

Now I wish to say, to my numerous friends and patrons, that I am thoroughly convinced that the mode of buying goods on time is both injurious to the buyer and seller.

I will hereafter Sell for Ready pay, at such prices that will defy all competion in this Town, State, or the United States.

No one should buy a dollars worth of Goods without calling at the Harvest Hymn For 1857.

O, Father, merciful and good,
O, Giver, ever kind,
Who feeds us with daily food
For body, soul and mind!
We worship Thee, we bless Thee,
We praise Thee evermore;
And heartily confess Thee,
The God whom we adore!

How thick with corn between the hills
The laughing valleys stand!
How plenteously thy mercy fills
The garners of the land!
And therefore will we raise Thee
Our humble anthem thus,
And, sinful children, praise Thee
For all Thy love to us!

At year by year in ceaseless love
Thy bounty never fails,
But still the blessings from above
O'erflows our hills and dales;
So truly we adore Thee,
Thou Giver of all Good,
And offer now before Thee
Thy people's gratitude!

The Potato Rot

We hear that there evident symptoms of the Potato Rot, in this section in Connecticut and other Eastern States, it has appeared and threatens not a little damage to the crops At the last meeting of the Lyceum of Natural History, on Thursday evening in Luce's Block, the principal subject of discussion was the "Potato Rot" and a report may not be uninteresting.

TOO FREQUENT INTERMARRIAGE OF POTATOES!

Prof. Everett remarked, that in his opinion the cause was to be sought for in the principle, that plants or animals propagated in an unnatural way, degenerate, and lose some of their essential qualities, and eventually, their vitality. In illustration of this principle he noticed the fact of "in and in" breeding of animals; that the inevitable consequence of this was, the degeneracy of the race, and if persisted in, extinguishment. It is not in the nature of the human race for near relatives to desire to marry, which of itself indicates the intention of nature that they should not. The result of this intermarrying is inevitable degeneracy, and loss of vitality, until after a few generations the offspring cannot live to maturity, and, of course, the race is extinguished. A scrofulous habit is engendered, which is increased in each generation. He further instanced the laws of vitality of fruit trees, incident in the continued practice of grafting. The grafted tree has not the hardihood or endurance of the natural one; and the farther removed the present tree is from the original seedling, the greater is the degeneracy, until the variety ceases to be worthy of culture. The first having been for a long time propagated by the artificial method, loses its seed. This fact is noticeable in all our grafted fruit, the quantity of seed is inconsiderable, compared with the natural fruit. He instanced the old Vergaloe pear, once the king of all pears; now an outcast, because it seldom can be brought to bear. He contended that nature had been cheated, and she revenged herself for the violation of her laws.

He stated that the potato was a plant having two ways of propagating itself; by the seed or balls, and the tuber. That in the natural state it would be as likely to spring from the seed as the root, further, that its natural place for growing was in the superficial covering of the earth. We have for centuries cultivated the potato almost exclusively by planting the tuber, seldom having recourse to the seed; and it has been put deep into the ground instead of in the superficial mould. Botanists predicated the failure of the potato long before it showed signs of degeneracy. In proof of his position he stated the fact that in the native land of the potato, Peru and Chili, where recourse is often had to the native plant for seed, the disease has never appeared; nor has it in California, which obtained its seed from those countries. The disease manifested itself at the same time on both sides of the Atlantic, but never touched the native plant, or those that were but a few removes from it.

Assuming this theory to be correct he said the way to restore it was plainly indicated:—Go back to the Andes and get the seed or plant the balls He stated that once or twice planting the balls would not restore the lost vitality, but it must be persisted in, and that in time, probably not less than 20 years, the desired effect would be produced. He disclaimed originality in his suggestions. It was the first theory ever advanced concerning the disease, and people were advised to plant the seeds. They did plant the seeds, and the potato still rotted and the theory was abandoned and the reason sought for in another direction. The result was as he should expect.—It took many generations of the potato to run out its vitality; it will many generations to restore it.

THE POTATO DESTROYED BY A PARASITE

Dr. DeCamp said that it was his misfortune to disagree with Prof. E. in the theory he had advanced. He had watched the dicease from its first appearance, and come to the conclusion that its cause was a parasitic fungus, attacking the leaves. In every case he had found this, and that after the mould-like fungus appeared the plant seemed to be poisoned. He instanced in illustration of his opinion, the mildew on grapes and gooseberries. This mildew, he said, was a parasitic plant, and that when it attached itself to the fruit, the fruit was ruined.—He instanced again, the rust on wheat as a parasitic fungus, appropriating to itself those juices which would have matured the berry.

[In Botany, a parasite is a plant without the means of providing nutriment for itself, or of elaborating sap into proper sap, but obtains nourishment immediately from other plants to which it attaches itself, and whose juices it absorbs; a parasitic plant is a plant that lives upon some other plant.]

Prof. Everett said that heretical as the opinion might be, he did not believe mould, mildew, and rust to be parasitic vegetables but rather exudations from the plants themselves. He would as soon think the white coat on the tongue of a fever patient, a vegetable, as ether of them. As to the rust on wheat, the microscope shows that it is an exudation through cracks in the silicious covering of the stalk. It was brought about by certain states of the weather.

Dr. DeCamp re-asserted his opinion, and sustained it by several arguments, perhaps too scientific for the general reader. The Dr. and Prof. failed to convince each other, as they are apt to; and the subject was further commented upon by Dr. Alden, who did not agree with either of them.—He did not advance any particular theory, but seemed to think the whole doubtful; and that we knew little about it.

PRESERVING APPLES.—An old farmer states that he has been in the habit of preserving his choice apples for late use, in plaster. He takes common flour barrels—covers the bottom to the depth of six inches with finely pulverized plaster, thoroughly dried, and then places a stratum of apples, not so close as to touch each other, and covers them with another layer of plaster, carefully filling up the interstices, and making the whole close and compact, by the pressure of the hand. In this way he fills his barrels and heads them up. He says the apples will keep sound for a twelve month, or longer, if desired. A crisp, juicy apple in the warm sultry days of June or July, is a luxury not often obtained; hence any method for the preservation of this fruit in the retention of its many and distinguishing excellencies, is a desideratum devoutly to be wished.

"All that falls from above is not a blessing," as the man said with the cake of ice on his head.

How to get a lady to show her foot. Praise the foot of some one else!

ONE DOLLAR

WILL BUY

ONE OF THE BEST PURGATIVE AND LIVER MEDICINES now before the public, namely DR. SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR, or LIVER REMEDY; that acts as a Cathartic (which subdues and more effectually than any other medicine known) it is not only a Cathartic, but a Liver remedy, acting best on the Liver to relieve the morbid matter in them on the stomach and bowels necessary of that matter, thus accomplishing two purposes effectually, without any of the painful feeling experienced in the operation of most Cathartics. It strengthens the system at the same time that it purges it, and when taken daily in moderate doses will strengthen and build it up with unusual rapidity.

DR SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR is compounded entirely from new articles of medicine, namely Gums.

Some idea of the strength of these gums may be formed when it is known that one bottle of the invigorator contains as much strength as one hundred doses of Calomel, without any of its debilitating effects.

Though possessing rare medical powers, these Gums have been but little known to Physicians and never used in their prescriptions until they in the form of the Invigorator, which met with such unprecedented success as to induce the proprietor to offer it as a family medicine tried and known in its effects. It has rarely ever failed to cure LIVER Complaints in their worst forms

INDIGESTION being caused by a deranged Liver is cured when the Liver is excited to action.

JAUNDICE is caused by an improper action of the LIVER, and as a proof that the Invigorator relieves this disease, let any one troubled with Jaundice take the Invigorator regularly one week, and their skin will begin to assume its original color.

COSTIVENESS can be permanently cured by the Invigorator. Take it in small doses on retiring, and it assists nature in her operations. By gradually diminishing the dose, the bowels are left in a healthy and active state, and work as regularly as clock work.

SICK HEADACHE is very soon relieved by taking a double dose of the Invigorator, which corrects all acidity and sourness of the stomach.

For an out-loaded stomach it has no equal, as it relies all oppressive or uneasy feeling after eating heartily. For a FAMILY MEDICINE generally, all who use it speak in the highest terms.

DR. SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR came to us recommended as a cure for Liver Complaints, and all diseases arising from a Diseased Liver. The testimonials of so many of our Physicians in its favor, induced us to try it, and now conviction is certain that it is one of the greatest blessings ever given to Dyspeptics, for it made a complete cure before the first bottle was taken, and we can eat anything edible without trouble, while before nothing but the lightest food would digest, and often that gave pain. Now that we want to say to all our readers in, if Liver Complaints or Dyspepsia trouble you, do not fail to try this the greatest remedy in the world.—State Paper.

We take infinite pleasure in recommending this medicine as a preventative for FEVER and AGUE, CHILL FEVER, and all FEVERS of a BILIOUS TYPE. It operates with certainty, and thousands are willing to testify to its wonderful virtues.

There has never been tried in our family a remedy which has met with such unbounded success in the cure of diseases incident to children, as DR. SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR, for is it alone for diseases of children that we use it; for it acts as a Cathartic so mildly and gently, and seems to remove the poison so thoroughly that we feel sure we are doing a service to all in advising them, when they need medicine, to try this remedy. There are cases that have come under our notice where front boards it has been received in diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels where all other remedies failed to give relief. It had become so useful in our family that we will not be without it.—Jacksonville, Ala. Republican.

The Rural American.

THE best practical, agricultural and family paper in the United States, is the RURAL AMERICAN, published at Union N Y. It is issued on the 1st and 15th of each month at the very low price of 50 cents a year in clubs; and it is about the same size, and contains quite as much reading matter as the $2 agricultural weeklies of the day. The second volume commenced in January, and it is now circulated in all the States and territories in the Union, and bids fair to outstrip, eventually, in circulation all similar papers. The great feature of its present success is the offering of a very valuable COLLECTION OF REMEDIES FOR THE CURE OF THE DISEASES OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS, at 50 cts. each to all persons who get up a small club of four subscribers for six months, at 25 cts. each, and remit $1 therefor. The proprietor has been about ten years collecting the materials, at a great cost, for said work, comprising about 300 letters and receipts, from the most extensive stock breaders of of the U States and Europe, and it is worth ten times its price to any stock breeder in the country. All the diseases to which cattle, horses sheep and swine are subject are embraced in the collection, and plain directions given to effect their cures. Samples of the Rural American, containing the details of this liberal offer to its club agents, will be sent free to all applicants. Local agents are wanted in every town in the United States, and very liberal terms are offered to traveling agents in every State. Apply to the Editor

THE SECRET INFIRMITIES OF

YOUTH AND MATURITY.

Just Published, Gratis, the 25th, Thousand.

A FEW WORDS ON THE RATIONAL TREATMENT, without Medicine, of Spermatorrhea or Local Weakness, Nocturnal Emissions, Genital and Nervous Debility, Premature Decay of the System, Impotency, and Impediments to Marriage generally, by B. DE LANEY, M D.

The important fact that the many alarming complaints originating in the imprudence and solitude of youth, may be easily removed WITHOUT MEDICINE, is in this small tract clearly demonstrated; and the entirely new and highly successful treatment, as adopted by the Author, fully explained, by means of which every one is enabled to cure HIMSELF perfectly and at the least possible cost, thereby avoiding all the advertised nostrums of the day.

AYER'S

Cathartic Pills

(SUGAR COATED)

ARE MADE TO

CLEANSE THE BLOOD AND CURE THE

Invalids, Fathers, Mothers, Physicians, Philanthropists, read, their Merits and Judge of their Virtues

Headache, Sick Headache, Foul Stomach,

DR. J. C. AYER: Sirs: I have been troubled for the worst headache any body can have to have, for your Pills. If ever human being was cured, they cleanse at once. If they will, others will learn the fact is worth knowing.

Yours with great respect, ED. W. FISH,
Clerk of Senate Ct.

Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaint,

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
WASHINGTON, D. C., 1856.

SIR: I have used your Pills in my family and in practice ever since you made them, and have found they are the best cathartic we employ. For regulating action on the liver is quick and decided, and by their use an admirable remedy for derangements of the stomach and bowels. Indeed, I have seldom found a case in which they did not readily yield to them, when persisted in, extinguishment. It is not in the nature of the human race for near relatives to desire to marry, which of itself indicates the intention of nature that they should not. The result of this intermarrying is inevitable degeneracy, and loss of vitality, until after a few generations the offspring cannot live to maturity, and, of course, the race is extinguished. A scrofulous habit is engendered, which is increased in each generation. He further instanced the laws of vitality of fruit trees, incident in the continued practice of grafting. The grafted tree has not the hardihood or endurance of the natural one; and the farther removed the present tree is from the original seedling, the greater is the degeneracy, until the variety ceases to be worthy of culture. The first having been for a long time propagated by the artificial method, loses its seed. This fact is noticeable in all our grafted fruit, the quantity of seed is inconsiderable, compared with the natural fruit. He instanced the old Vergaloe pear, once the king of all pears; now an outcast, because it seldom can be brought to bear. He contended that nature had been cheated, and she revenged herself for the violation of her laws.

He stated that the potato was a plant having two ways of propagating itself; by the seed or balls, and the tuber. That in the natural state it would be as likely to spring from the seed as the root, further, that its natural place for growing was in the superficial covering of the earth. We have for centuries cultivated the potato almost exclusively by planting the tuber, seldom having recourse to the seed; and it has been put deep into the ground instead of in the superficial mould. Botanists predicated the failure of the potato long before it showed signs of degeneracy. In proof of his position he stated the fact that in the native land of the potato, Peru and Chili, where recourse is often had to the native plant for seed, the disease has never appeared; nor has it in California, which obtained its seed from those countries. The disease manifested itself at the same time on both sides of the Atlantic, but never touched the native plant, or those that were but a few removes from it.

Assuming this theory to be correct he said the way to restore it was plainly indicated:—Go back to the Andes and get the seed or plant the balls He stated that once or twice planting the balls would not restore the lost vitality, but it must be persisted in, and that in time, probably not less than 20 years, the desired effect would be produced. He disclaimed originality in his suggestions. It was the first theory ever advanced concerning the disease, and people were advised to plant the seeds. They did plant the seeds, and the potato still rotted and the theory was abandoned and the reason sought for in another direction. The result was as he should expect.—It took many generations of the potato to run out its vitality; it will many generations to restore it.

THE POTATO DESTROYED BY A PARASITE

Dr. DeCamp said that it was his misfortune to disagree with Prof. E. in the theory he had advanced. He had watched the dicease from its first appearance, and come to the conclusion that its cause was a parasitic fungus, attacking the leaves. In every case he had found this, and that after the mould-like fungus appeared the plant seemed to be poisoned. He instanced in illustration of his opinion, the mildew on grapes and gooseberries. This mildew, he said, was a parasitic plant, and that when it attached itself to the fruit, the fruit was ruined.—He instanced again, the rust on wheat as a parasitic fungus, appropriating to itself those juices which would have matured the berry.

[In Botany, a parasite is a plant without the means of providing nutriment for itself, or of elaborating sap into proper sap, but obtains nourishment immediately from other plants to which it attaches itself, and whose juices it absorbs; a parasitic plant is a plant that lives upon some other plant.]

Prof. Everett said that heretical as the opinion might be, he did not believe mould, mildew, and rust to be parasitic vegetables but rather exudations from the plants themselves. He would as soon think the white coat on the tongue of a fever patient, a vegetable, as ether of them. As to the rust on wheat, the microscope shows that it is an exudation through cracks in the silicious covering of the stalk. It was brought about by certain states of the weather.

Dr. DeCamp re-asserted his opinion, and sustained it by several arguments, perhaps too scientific for the general reader. The Dr. and Prof. failed to convince each other, as they are apt to; and the subject was further commented upon by Dr. Alden, who did not agree with either of them.—He did not advance any particular theory, but seemed to think the whole doubtful; and that we knew little about it.

PRESERVING APPLES.—An old farmer states that he has been in the habit of preserving his choice apples for late use, in plaster. He takes common flour barrels—covers the bottom to the depth of six inches with finely pulverized plaster, thoroughly dried, and then places a stratum of apples, not so close as to touch each other, and covers them with another layer of plaster, carefully filling up the interstices, and making the whole close and compact, by the pressure of the hand. In this way he fills his barrels and heads them up. He says the apples will keep sound for a twelve month, or longer, if desired. A crisp, juicy apple in the warm sultry days of June or July, is a luxury not often obtained; hence any method for the preservation of this fruit in the retention of its many and distinguishing excellencies, is a desideratum devoutly to be wished.

"All that falls from above is not a blessing," as the man said with the cake of ice on his head.

How to get a lady to show her foot. Praise the foot of some one else!

Dysentery, Relax, and Worms.

POST OFFICE, HARTLAND, LIV. CO., MICH., Nov. 7, 1856.

DR. AYER: Your Pills are the perfection of what they have done my wife more good than I can tell. She had been sick and pining away for months, off to be doctored, at great expense, but got no better than commenced taking your Pills, which soon started by expelling large quantities of worms (dead by the body. They afterwards cured her, and one daughter of bloody dysentery. One of our neighbors had fever, my wife cured him with two doses of your Pills, others around us paid from five to twenty dollars bills, and lost much time, without being cured, even then. Such a medicine as yours, which is as good and honest, will be prized here.

Indigestion and Impurity of the Blood.

From Rev. J. V. Himes, Pastor of Advent Church.

DR. AYER: I have used your Pills with entire success in my family and among those I am visiting in distress. To regulate the organs of digestion and the blood they are the very best remedy I have known, and I can confidently recommend them to my friends.

Yours, J. V. HIMES.
WARSAW, WYOMING CO., N. Y., Oct. 1856.

DEAR SIR: I am using your Cathartic Pills in my practice, and find them an excellent purgative to cleanse the system, and purify the foulness of the blood.

DR. AYER: Your Pills are the paragon of all great in medicine. They have cured my little girl of ulcerous sores upon her hands and feet that had incurable for years. Her mother has been long afflicted with blotches and pimples on her skin and her hair. After our child was cured, she also took Pills, and they have cured her. ASA MORGAN.

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and Gout.

From the Rev. Dr. Hawkes, of the Methodist Epis.

PULASKI HOUSE, SAVANNAH, GA., Jan. 1, 1857.

HONORED SIR: I consider it my duty to let you know the skill has brought me if I did not respect my age. A cold settled in my limbs and brought on excruciating neuralgic pains, which ended in chronic rheumatism. Notwithstanding I had the best of physicians to attend me, I got the better of my disease, instead of getting worse and worse, until, by the advice of your excellent agent in Baltimore, Dr. Mackenzie, I tried your Pills. Their effects were slow, but sure. By perseverance in the use of them I am now entirely well.

BENJ. CHAMBERS, Baton Rouge, La., 6 Dec., 1856.

DR. AYER: I have been entirely cured by your Pills of Rheumatic Gout—a painful disease that had afflicted me for years. VINCENT SIMMS.

For Dropsy, Plethora, or kindred complaints, requiring an active purge, they are an excellent remedy.

For Costiveness or Constipation, Flatulency, a Dull Pill, they are agreeable and effectual.

Fits, Suppression, Paralysis, Inflammation, and Deafness, and Partial Blindness, have been cured by the alterative action of these Pills.

Most of the pills in market contain Mercury, which though a valuable remedy in skilful hands, is dangerous in a public pill, from the dreadful consequences frequently follow its incautious use. These contain no mercury or mineral substance whatever.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, INFLUENZA, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION,

and for the relief of consumptive patients in advanced stages of the disease

We need not speak to the public of its virtues. Throughout every town and almost every family in the American States, its wonderful cures of pulmonary complaints have made it already known. Nay, by many families in any civilized country on this continent, from personal experience of its effects; and few are the communities any where which have not among some living trophy of its victory over the insidious and dangerous diseases of the throat and lungs. Whilst this is the most powerful antidote yet known to man for the formidable and dangerous diseases of the pulmonary organs, it is one, the pleasantest and safest remedy that can be employed for infants and young persons. Parents should have it in store against the liabilities existing to exist upon their unprepared. We have abundant proof that it believes the CHERRY PECTORAL saves more lives by preventing consumptions it prevents than those it cures. Keep it by you, and cure your colds while they are curable. Neglect them until no human skill can master the fell disease that, fastened on the vitals. Take note that All know the dreadful fatality of lung disease, and they know too the virtues of this remedy, we only need say more than to assure them it is still made the best it can be. We spare no cost, no care, no toil to produce the most perfect possible, and thus afford those who use it the best agent which our skill can furnish for the cure of disease.

THE TECUMSEH NURSERY.

CHARLES STRONG, Proprietor.

The liberal encouragement heretofore extended to me, has established me from time to time to increase my stock of Nursery products, so that now I have not only one of the largest establishments in this State, but one which is excelled by none other in the quality of our plants. These considerations, together with that other object, moderation in prices, enable us to offer inducements, second to none, to those commencing the business, or buying to sell again. Every care is taken in the training and culture of my trees; while in the Nursery, to fit them properly for the hand of the Planter, regarding symmetry of proportion, and healthfulness of constitution as cardinal points. I would recommend Speculators and Planters to make their purchases in the Autumn for Spring sales, as it is decidedly the best Season.

Our packing, for which a charge barely covering the expense is always made, is done in the most faithful manner, any size being to make my packages proof against even the carelessness of Railroad employees—more than this I don't think I can safely promise. Confirmatory of this assurance, it may be mentioned in no invidious manner that the excellence of my packing has been publicly noticed in many papers, and that I rarely hear of injury to my Trees, on arriving at their destination, even though they may have been long on the way.

The prices for the quantities specified in the annexed List must be understood to be literal and invariable, the rate per thousand not being admissable for any number of hundreds less—and they are based on the competitive condition that the selections of varieties shall be left to ourselves; pledging ourselves, however, that the choice of our correspondents shall be complied with as nearly as may be, and that our selections be composed of the best leading popular sorts, in due proportion, with more or less of the new popular kinds, according to our ability to supply them.

To Correspondents.

FIRST.—Write your Name, Place of Residence, County and State, so legibly that it cannot be misunderstood. Disappointments not attributable to us may thereby ensue.

SECOND.—Give particular directions as to the mode, route or line, by which you would have your packages conveyed, and to whose care you would have them consigned. For want of instruction in these particulars, we shall forward them according to the best of our judgments; and we expressly desire it to be understood that all responsibility on our part, as to the goods, ceases on delivering them to the forwarders designated, and that to the forwarders alone purchasers must look for all losses by detention, injury, or miscarriage.

THIRD.—Inform us immediately of an error, omission or oversight, should any occur, when it shall be properly adjusted.

FOURTH.—Our terms of payment are Cash, or a satisfactory note of acceptance, payable at Bank. Remittance by Check or Draft, should always be made payable to our order

Annual Address.

Before the Lenawee County Agricultural Society, October 8, 1857. By B. L. Baxter Esq of Tecumseh.

Ladies and Gentlemen. There was a time, some two thousand years ago when, while its inhabitants were occupied with war and conquest, the fair fields of Italy fell into neglect, and agriculture at Rome was held in disrepute.

The natural consequences of this soon made themselves manifest throughout the length and breadth of the land, and even distant and newly acquired provinces began to exhibit its like baneful effects.—Rome was at this time mistress of the world. Unrivalled in military power, and scarcely yielding to the still classic Greece in letters, her rulers and statesmen saw with apprehension and regret, this fatal mildew, thus settling down upon her future hopes.

Her young men, no longer content to labor in the field, rushed into the army, and into all the dissipations of city life, while her maidens no longer plied the distaff nor sat patiently at the loom, but made haste to spend the fortunes which their fathers had wrested by conquest from other lands, in luxury and dress.

Rome was indeed glorious, but well her statesmen know, that Rome without Italy could not endure, and this garden of the world was fast becoming an uncultivated waste. The days of patriotic yeomanry and independent agricultural pride, seemed to have well nigh passed away, and the time to be rapidly impending when slaves alone should till her soil.

The result of this state of popular sentiment was then what it always has been, and must be until the end of time. No pursuit, no matter how important or indispensible even it may be to the wants of man, can flourish under such an incubus as this. And from the remedy then proposed and employed, we may learn a like lesson of wisdom and experience.

The Roman Cæsar, consulting with the best and wisest statesman of the Empire, determined to correct this public evil, by first attempting to correct the public sentiment from which it sprang. Imperial fields were cultivated and imperial honors were bestowed alike upon plebian and patrician husbandmen. Rome's proudest generals and statesmen were taken from the field, her orators and poets spake and sang in praise of rural life.

Under the direction and immediate patronage of the powerful Mæcenas, the great Virgil wrote and published his inimitable Georgics, containing in sweet flowing numbers the best and wisest maxims of the age for the successful management of farm and herd, of flock and fold, the garden and the field. And as a result of this, we are informed by history, that scarcely a quarter of a century had elapsed ere Italy had resumed its beautiful fertility, and Rome its former and more permanent prosperity.

The memory of many now before me will easily run back to a period of not unlike agricultural depression, arising too from causes not entirely dissimilar. It will require no longer stretch of memory, and none at all of the imagination, to look back upon a time when, here also, later in the fields was, if it be not even now, too much regarded as servile and degrading. When our young men were rushing into the professions no matter how over-crowded they were, nor how poor an encouragement they might offer for even a competent support; into the stores where clerkships with their continuous rounds of monotonous, unintellectual duties, afforded scarcely a hope of promotion or improvement, into anything and into everything, so that they might only escape the drudgery of the farm.

Nor were the young men alone in this. The ladies too, who always, and of right, take the lead in all matters of fashion or taste, but too manifestly placed a like low estimate upon the labors of the field.—The hardy hand of healthful, honest toil found no favor with them, when compared with the sleek and soft effeminacy of the more fashionable pursuits. And even the very parents themselves, now grown old and rich in agricultural toil and industry, by a most strange infatuation drinking in of the same popular idea, and tamely accepting for themselves the meed of undeserved inferiority, seemed with a like eagerness to rival each other in seeking for their sons and daughters a way of escape from their own chosen pursuits.

The effect of such a perversion of popular sentiment, could not but be most deeply and injuriously felt; felt both upon the character of our youth and upon the agricultural interests of our land. And so it was, and is, even here to-day.

That such a sentiment is, and was without foundation in fact, or in common sense, it is needless to assert.

Agriculture was man's first pursuit, ere he had lost by sin his Maker's smile and when for pastime only, he tilled the garden of Eden beside the banks of the Euphrates. It was honored then, for in the cool of the evening when the labors of the day were done, he talked with his Maker face to face. It was of the firstlings of the flock that Abel offered up the sacrifice approved of God. The early Patriarchs sought from the field and fold their honors and wealth.

Our Mother Earth was given us as a rich inheritance from heaven, to gather from its fertile soil by patient industry, a full supply for all our wants. Can there be anything mean or degrading in putting forth the hand to pluck what all must have, and what the Only Wise and Only Bountiful has placed within our reach?—The product of the soil is the source, and only source of a permanent wealth or national prosperity, the wide world over.—Was it meant think you only for slaves? It is the base of commerce, the base of manufactures, the base of Science and the base of Art. Without it, they could none of them exist. Shall they then look down in scorn upon the alma mater from which they all alike derive their nourishment?

Agriculture is the natural condition of man, where other things being equal, his entire energies and character are and may be best developed. That it is one of the best health developing employments in which men engage, the statistics of the world have ever shown. And this too in a day and age when it is pursued not in any strict accordance with the recognized laws of health, but oftentimes in contravention of them; when it is pursued not so much as a natural and rational enjoyment as it is as a continuous and productive drudgery. And yet even under all these unfavorable circumstances, it offers for the inspection of mankind a cleaner bill of health, and a more vigorous life than almost any other business or employment known to science.

Its healthful and varied pursuits also promote a fuller and more perfect physical development than can anywhere else be found. This is a conceded fact and will not be denied. It is also an equally obvious fact, though perhaps not so fully understood nor appreciated, that health and physical energy are an essential element in intellectual development, which no amount of study or mental culture can substitute or supply. The mind acts only through the organism of the body. The brains and nerves are just as essential to give power and energy to thought, as is the mind itself. They are in fact part of the mind without an adequate development of which, however much informed or enlightened it may be, it is imperfect and comparatively powerless. It is a mistake then, and one into which but too many of our youth have most unhappily fallen, that agricultural pursuits are not well adapted to the highest development of mind and cultivation of native talent.

We do not of course intend to assert that continuous unremitting toil upon the farm, scarcely more than anywhere else, would tend to mental cultivation. A certain amount of relaxation from physical toil is of course in any condition essential to this. But what we do assert, is, that there is no physical employment which better developes the physical, and energises the mental powers of man. And more than that, without a good physical development induced by frequent and active exercise, the mind cannot attain its clearest perceptions nor its highest powers.

Labor is a physical necessity of our being. Entailed upon us as a curse, yet such have we ourselves become by that same sad lapse whose irrecoverable fiat has passed alike upon nature and on man, that doubly cursed are those who would now seek to escape its inexorable penalties. Without it we cannot be happy.—Without it we sink into ennui, effeminacy and insignificance.

And yet it is none the less true that an excess of labor tends to a like enervation and insignificance. The supposed necessity for this has been for the most part, the foundation for an opinion that agricultural pursuits are not favorable to mental development. But the fact is there is no such necessity in the case, but on the contrary any such idea is of itself a most unfortunate mistake. The experience of human industry will show that those whom avarice, or even a sense of stern necessity, has driven on from day to day and from year to year, in one continuous round of unremitting toil, while adding thus to their own feebleness and discomfort, have at the same time quite over reached the mark with the regard to gain.

While they are thus seeking to secure certain ends or gains by an excess of labor, it will be found that some less grasping but more thoughtful neighbor, has contrived in some way or other to save a material portion of this excess of toil, and still secure the same, if not superior results.

It may be by better informing himself with regard to the comparative demand and supply of certain crops, it may be by better discovering and learning how to supply certain defects in his soil; it may be by procuring for his use better implements, or better stock, better seed, or a better rotation of crops, or in short by a thousand ways and means against which, any increase of toil, to the utmost extent of human endurance, must in vain attempt successfully to compete.

I know that there is a general prejudice against book-farming as for the most part Utopian and very unprofitable. And so it is when it leads only to theorizing and experiment. But when theory and practice are both tested by experimental results, and guided by a well-informed judgement and sound common sense, there is no department of human labor where men have been able to produce more magnificent improvements.

It was a sadly erroneous dogma, but one adhered to with a pertinacity that almost defied investigation or disproof, 'that Agriculture was a field forever closed to science—open only to toil. A field in which theory was madness and experiment folly; in which routine was the only wisdom, and any departure from it a mark of incapacity.'

No wonder that such a dogma as this, and followed also but too faithfully, should have enstamped, at length upon this noblest and best of human pursuits a comparative impress of inferiority and servitude.

But that day, and that unworthy impress, has, we trust, well nigh passed away. In spite of prejudice, and in spite of opposition, thinking men, and men of science have given themselves up to the correction and investigation of the many evils and blunders of this interminable routine, and that too with an earnestness of zeal and fulness of success that is revolutionizing the general sentiment, and subverting general practice of the agriculture of the world. If experiment is folly, then one common madness is fast possessing the entire population, and that too with an advantage and success far in advance of the sagest wisdom of other years.

Science has been called in, and most successfully too, to lend her aid to increase the productiveness, and lessen the weariness of toil. Whatever may have been thought or said before, it is now beginning to be understood that there is very little danger that men will either read or think or know too much to farm successfully.—It is true, that the result of early experimental failures, has passed into a popular prejudice against this kind of farming, but it is a prejudice that is fast passing away before an almost universal experience and there is some consolation in the belief that if it will not die out in the broad light of practical science, it must ere long be starved out in an unequal competition with a more intelligent and better directed labor.

I will not now dwell upon the many and important practical improvements in Agriculture so successfully developed within the past few years. I will not speak of the agricultural science, books, tracts and magazines now placed within the reach of every one, and giving to them all, at slight expense, the benefit of their united wisdom and experience, and more than this, the advantage of all the blunders and losses of other years. I will not enlarge upon the beneficial influences of Agricultural Societies, such as your's is, and has been, in developing the resources and wealth of the country and introducing emulation and improvement into every department of agricultural labor. Nor will I, as I most certainly might with propriety and pleasure, descant in eulogistic terms upon the agricultural display this day made within your enclosures, and the indication which it gives of the wealth, intelligence and enterprise of the farmers of Lenawee—not because these topics are unworthy of notice, but because your attention is often called to them by far abler and more experienced men, and their more direct, and remunerative tendencies you are not soon likely, either to forget, or cease to cultivate; but still more, because there is another, and a more purely literary and intellectual department of this subject, towards which I desire, at this time, more particularly to invite your attention.

I refer to a consideration of how far the erudition of literature and science and the refinements of taste and art, may be properly and profitably connected with agricultural pursuits.

We have seen that there is no foundation in fact nor in the character of the employment itself, for any prejudice, or estimate, placing this department of labor, in point of dignity or respectability, upon a level below any other pursuit in which men are or can be engaged. That it is and must ever continue to be, the substantial base and foundation of all human prosperity. That as it is one of the most natural, so it is one of the most healthful, of industrial pursuits, and perhaps from its diversity of employment in the open air, the very best calculated for a thorough and perfect physical and intellectual developement.

That any depression of its character or interests has been rather the result of a want of self-appreciation, reliance and intelligence, than of any influences or causes from without. That in this, as in every other department of human industry whether physical or mental, 'the fault is not in our stars but in ourselves, that we are underlings.' That just so soon as any employment or profession shall learn to respect itself, it need no longer fear for the respect or estimation of the world.

We have alluded to a time when agriculture was not in this country, held in the same repute as now, and to the more immediate influences that have brought about the change. We would not place any limits to the extent to which the same influences may be made conducive to improvement in the same direction.

But to our mind productiveness is not the only thing in matter to be looked after or desired. We know that this is the utilitarian view of the subject, and therefore the one most in vogue with the community at large. Yet while we would in all reasonable ways and to any reasonable extent, seek to increase the productiveness of agricultural or any other labor, we would also at the same time and even at some slight expense of profit, seek to add what we could to its attractiveness and intelligence.

As we have seen, and as the history of the world and of human nature cannot fail to demonstrate, it must always be the intelligence of those engaged in it, that will give dignity or character to any pursuit. And further, it must also be the comfort and pleasure with which men may engage in and pursue it, that will allure and hold to its ranks the thinking and intelligent, thus giving dignity and character to its prosecution.

It is to our mind a sad spectacle, and one not by any means calculated to increase our estimate of human nature, to see men over-tasked or held to an uncongenial or unhealthful employ by a sense of gain alone. We never could be led to endorse so base a prostitution of all the higher, nobler purposes of human life.

Reason as we may, it is not all of life to accumulate hoarded wealth, nor can its acquisition alone secure the sum of human happiness. An intelligent estimate of the scope and resources of a human existence, or even an intelligent observation of human experience, would lead almost any one to a widely different conclusion. That it will not best subserve our own interest to toil only for wealth we can readily understand, and that it is not by any means certain, nor indeed scarcely calculated to promote the permanent happiness or prosperity of our children, the history of many a ruined family and disappointed hope, more than sufficiently attests. And yet such is the tenacity and weakness of human nature in this direction, that all sense of personal discomfort and all the teachings of a melancholy experience, seem well nigh lost upon us.

Is it not then and proper for us to inquire, how far it is possible and practicable to add to the leisure and intelligence, the comforts and refinements of agricultural life, without too much encroaching upon either its productiveness or necessary toil?

We have seen that toil however severe if at the expense of intelligence, is seldom productive. It must also be admitted that mere intelligence without labor will produce nothing. But the great question is, how far intelligence may be combined with labor so as to give its greatest pleasure and dignity to the one, and its greatest productiveness to other.

We shall assume that every intelligent mind would prefer to add to its employments, whatever, without conflicting with its general results, will add to its resources, character and enjoyments. That whether pecuniarily profitable or not, there is to every one if prepared to receive and appreciate it, an elevated and ennobling enjoyment in the gratification of a refined and cultivated taste, or the resources of an expanded and well-informed mind.

We know that there is a severe and ascetic philosophy that would reduce everything to the unvarying criterion of dollars and cents, allowing to human nature no gratification or indulgence, save such as may be dictated by an absolute and inflexible necessity; but with such a sentiment as this we readily discard all sympathy, for we believe it pertains rather to the enslavement than the benefaction of the race.

Now Agriculture we believe to be a field alike suitable and appropriate for the successful cultivation of letters and science refinement and taste. That this can be done in a manner not inconsistent with its other appropriate duties, at the same time adding greatly to its enjoyments, attractiveness and influence.

It is true that leisure is necessary to improvement in this direction, but so it is to study and improvement everywhere.—And it is also true as we have seen, that constituted as man is or at least has been made to be by the fall, absolute leisure divorced from labor, is only a curse.—Where then can the two, each so essential to the perfection of the other, be more happily or more profitably combined, than upon the farm?

The fact is that even now, as arranged and managed almost without reference to this, our farmers have more absolute leisure for reading and general study than any artisan, mechanic, or profession.—Outside of his profession, the active lawyer, clergyman or physician, has very little time for general reading, and it is only by most scrupulously husbanding every leisure moment which he has, that he can keep himself informed of the current literature of the day. Our merchants clerks, mechanics and artisans, have if possible even less time for this.

We know that most of our farmers feel that the toil and labors of the day are such, as to leave when they are done, no energy or disposition for reading or study, but that their leisure hours are all needed for rest or sleep. But there is no need for any such over-straining and over-tasking as this; nor do we do our own selves or our children justice, when we commit ourselves or them to any such round of unremitting toil. As we have seen before, we scarcely gain pecuniarily by it, and taking the whole of life as it is, we become there by in reality greatly the losers. We neither subserve their interests nor ours, when we thus over-task the physical at the expense of the mental powers. Both have their place, and should receive their appropriate share of time. As we have seen before, there is both pleasure and economy in this.—Labor thus directed, loses at once all its character of drudgery, and becomes a healthful, pleasure-giving, thought-invigorating exercise. It rises to the dignity of science, and all the true but untitled nobility of a manly independence.

Let us not be understood as in any degree advocating idleness or even an elegant leisure, in its more effeminate sense. There is no such thing as utter rest in this restless world. The workers are the winners everywhere. But there is according to our theory, work for every one to do besides mere physical toil; nor do we believe that it was ever meant that some should do all the physical, and others all the mental labor of the world.

It is a sickly and unnatural state of things, that would confine any man or any class of men, either of this alone. And least of all should our farming communities lay out for themselves this annual excess of over-work, as they are so much inclined and accustomed to do, instead of only so much as they and their families can do easily and well. And most of all can they and should they, best improve their leisure hours, not in idleness, but in the study of nature, the researches of science, reading and mental culture.

Do they say or feel, that they cannot afford the time or means for this? A moment's consideration will convince us that it is not necessarily so. There are very few of our farmers who are not from year to year laying by, or investing in some way larger or smaller sums, which it is their purpose ultimately to leave as an inheritance to their children. And even where this is not the case, while the improvements of art have almost doubled, and oftentimes more than trebled to us the product of a given amount of labor, an increased extravagance of living and dress, has kept an even pace with every increase in income. Like the manna of old which the Jews gathered in the wilderness, they who gather little find nothing wanting, and they who gather much have nothing left. Fashion has become the hungry vortex into which it is all alike absorbed.

Now there is no one who can doubt that by a [illegible] and judicious retrenchment of superfluous expense only, ample means and leisure for mental culture could be made easily accessible to all. Nor can any reflecting mind for a moment doubt that industrious habits and a well informed cultivated intellect, is by far the surest and richest inheritance that any parent can leave to his children.

Before a thousand times better, leave these premises with these and with a healthful respect for the industry and economy by which competence is won, than without these, and without experience, but in their place a vain, conceited, contemptible, contemptuous thing but extravagance, and an undisguised scorn for all industrial pursuits, with all the hoarded wealth of a toiling lifetime.

Let me not be thought Utopian. I would not underrate the utilities nor even the necessities of agricultural life. They have their place and ought to be disregarded.—But while according to these their due importance, I would also find both leisure and means for the intellectualities and refinements that may appropriately elevate and adorn it. As we value its interests, let us learn to turn it not only to pecuniary account by seeking to increase its revenues, but let us also seek to elevate it, by adding to its intelligence and refinement.

Let us cultivate it not only as a means of competence to ourselves, whereby to accumulate wealth to be afterwards devoted to other and more honorable pursuits, but the rather as an employment and a profession, for ourselves and for our children's children.

Let us make our homes attractive with all the adornments of science and art properly within our reach. Let us not count that expenditure a loss which hangs our walls with paintings, or fills our libraries with books; which gives to our children the delicate pencillings of art, or the sweet tones of music, which leads them to divide in pleasing alternation, the labors of the field with the murmurs of the grove, the tending of the flocks, with antiquated lore

What father, think you, might not be justly proud of such a home as this, or could be made to feel that the leisure afforded to his children for such pursuits was lost, or the expense incurred in placing them within their reach was thrown away? Is it no source of pleasure to the lassitude of declining years, to know that the eyes of your children even in distant lands, turn ever yearningly towards the patrimonial halls which it has been your life-long pride to ornament and adorn; the pleasant grounds you used to cultivate; the garden walks you tended; the old library, whose well stored alcoves afforded exhaustless resources of knowledge and thought to them and you, and to that cheerful fireside where pleasing converse and unchidden glee, relieved with welcome zest the weariness of toil?

To know that you have made your home a consecrated spot to all beneath its roof, a place where memory loves to linger, left by your children as they issue forth upon life's rugged paths, with sadness and regret, returned to ever with a fondness and delight?

Such a place ought every home to be, and most of all, the farmer's. He dwells with nature; and well may he gather all the sweet beauties of nature around his dwelling place. The forests are his. The noblest and most beautiful of her waving trees should shade his rest. The fields are his, and the poetry of the stars looks down in silence upon them from above.

Alone upon the farm or in the wood, he has ample time for communing with himself, with nature and with God. As the atmosphere is pure about him, uncontaminated with all the reeking impurities of the city, so the moral atmosphere which he breathes, is, for the most part, free from the taint and corruption that festers in the crowded marts of men. In the midst of rural employments he is, for the most part, freed from the allurements and temptations which they offer from without; while he feels, and knows that there is no eye turned upon him, save that all seeing one that slumbers not.

The influence of all this is to purify the mind and heart, and to refine the soul. Industry does this. Converse with nature does it. The cultivation of intelligence does it—No wonder then that the honest integrity, the truthfulness, and freedom loving patriotism of our farmers should have passed into a proverb.

Now the same outward influences that have given character and probity to the parent, will exert an equal happy and healthy control over the destinies of the child.

Hence, it has always been admitted and understood, that for the cultivation of those sterner virtues with which human character is adorned, the farm is, of all places in the world, the safest and fittest place for the training of children. But the misfortune of it has too often been, that parents, misunderstanding, or disregarding the advantages and dignity of their calling, have not desired their children to follow in their footsteps, but have hastened them away into other and less safe pursuits, or by neglecting to provide for their intellectual wants, have driven them away, to secure elsewhere, what they had hetty learned at home

Parents and farmers of Lenawee, allow and receive the few simple suggestions which I have thus sought to urge upon your attention. You will not understand me to propose or desire, the incurring of large or inconvenient expense, nor any serious retrenchment of important and necessary labor. It is only needful that parental thought and conversation should be turned in this direction, and the leisure hours, and sports of your children guided into these channels, to bring about for the most part, the results desired. You are not called upon to sacrifice, but only to appreciate. To give if you but only would, the same amount of thoughtful attention and expense to the cultivation and refinement of your little ones, that you now give, and that too, neither improperly nor unprofitably, to the improvement of your farms and stock, and you will have introduced into your happy homes, before another ten years shall have passed away, a sweet intelligence and taste, content and nobleness of thought, that all India's gold could not buy

We need not to be told, that a picture hung upon the wall is a simple thing, yet every time the eye is turned upon it, its impress is left upon the mind, until, while even as yet we heed it not, the gentle taste and delicate refinement of which it is so fitting an exponent, has become an elemental portion of our very being, its quiet beauty, an ever present joy.

So too, let music lend her charms to soften and refine, let Botany unfold the treasures of spring, Astronomy the majesty and beauty of the skies, Geology the mysteries of earth, let Chemistry economise the soil, and poetry and literature lend sweetness and intelligence to weariness and labor; let architectural proportion add its beauty without expense, and rural refinement its sweetness without cost, and ere you are aware, your quiet homes are sylvan in repose, and classic in adornment, and thinking heads, and beating hearts, and lofty souls, are gathered round your humble firesides.

Gone.—The former President of the Michigan Central R. R Company, Mr Forbes, has sailed for England to try to negotiate a portion of the proposed loan of $2,000,000 for that company. A considerable amount has already been subscribed in Boston.

Harper & Brothers expect to resume their full business transactions before long and they anticipate that any curtailment of it, with the accompanying discharge of employees, will be only temporary.

Ohio Election.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 17.

Chase elected, by about one thousand majority. All the ticket, except Hickenlooper, ahead of Chase. All the returns are considered official.

In Memoriam.

(Mrs. CHARLES HEWITT.)

She walked amid us in the strength
Of earthly love, and heavenly grace,
A gentle kindness in her tone,
A radiant reflection on her face;
A beauty, not of fashion's mould,
But heart and deed, and fervent love,
The breathing of a human life,
O'erladen with the life above.

"We did not, and how could we dream,"
That she just fade so soon away,
That what we thought the morning beam,
Should prove the light of setting day?
That what we cherished here on Earth,
And decreed a boon to mortals given,
Of human love, and human worth,
Was but the twilight smile of Heaven!

Yet so it was, and ever thus,
Do Earthly joys and treasures fly,
Like flowers we hold them in our grasp,
And think their beauty cannot die,
Yet while we hold them, they are crushed;
And thus our saddened hearts we bring
To know an angel's shining worth,
But by that angel's fading wing.

Yet well we know 'tis better thus,
The kindness of a human love
Was meant, not more, to soothe us here,
Than win us to our home above;
"The loved and lost" of other years,
Stand waiting at the farther shore,
Where faith, though dimmed with blinding tears,
Still saith, "they're only gone before."

LITERARY NOTICES.

Peterson's Magazine.

The November number of this excellent magazine, edited by Mrs. Ann S. Stephens and Charles J. Peterson, and published by C. J. Peterson, at No. 306 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, is duly received and always welcome. The Fashion Plates, Work Patterns, &c., as well as the reading matter, are such as to commend it to the favorable notice of every one. We are not surprised to learn that it is constantly increasing in circulation and popularity. Terms—$2,00 per annum.

Hunt's Merchants' Magazine.

The October number is received. Among its leading articles, are, "Export Trade of Southern Russia," "Political Economy; Chap. VI," "European Commercial Correspondence," "Specie Prices and its results," "Why have we not more Merchant Statesmen?" "Commercial and Industrial Cities—Dubuque, Iowa," "The chief cause of Western Failures, &c., &c

Published monthly by Freeman Hunt Esq., New York. Terms—$5,00 per annum.

Peninsular Journal of Medicine

The October number of this valuable Journal is promptly upon our table. It is ably edited, and seems to be regarded as competent authority with the profession generally throughout the State. It is edited by Prof's Pitcher & Palmar and Doct's Brodie & Christian and published monthly by John Kerr & Co., Detroit Mich. Terms—$2 00.

Michigan Journal of Education.

The October number of this Journal, which is a reliable adjunct to the cause and an honor to the State, is received, and always welcome to our exchanges. It is published monthly by John M. Gregory, Editor and Proprietor, Ann Arbor, Mich., at $1,00 per annum. Mr. Gregory who is a writer of no ordinary character and talent, is also assisted by some of the first educational talent in the State. Printed at the Argus office by E. B. Pond Esq.

Lenawee Co. Teacher's Institute.

This Institute is now in session at Clinton, to continue until Saturday, when it adjourns to attend the Mass meeting at this place. There are public Lectures every evening. This evening and Friday evening are to be occupied by the Rev. Mr. Foster and Prof. Estabrook, of Ypsilanti. The Rev. H. G. Blinn lectured on Tuesday evening. We hope as many of our citizens will attend the institute as can conveniently do so. We did not get a proper notice of the Institute in time to publish it in our last issue, or we should have gladly done it.

Kansas Election.

The entire result as indicated thus far by the returns, is as follows:

	Council.	Representatives
Free State	9	21
Nat Dem.	3	9
Doubtful	1	10

Giving a Free State majority in both houses; and as Legislative bodies are the judges of the qualifications of their members, a two thirds vote will probably be obtained, in both houses.

The Custom House Robbers Caught.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.

Somerville, one of the robbers of the Richmond Custom House, was arrested in Richmond to day, and a portion of the deposits recovered. Wheeler, his accomplice, was committed to jail here yesterday on the same charge. The latter, when arrested, gave up $300, a pair of gold diamond studs, a splendid gold watch and a bunch of skeleton keys. He is known to be the son of a celebrated English thief, and he has committed heavy thefts in various cities of the Union. Somerville was concerned in the robbery of the jewels in the Patent Office, which took place a few years ago.

CHICAGO, Oct. 17.

In the tenth Congressional district of Indiana, Case, (Rep.) is elected by about 900 majority.

The Bank of Tecumseh.

We have for the most part chosen to say but little about this Institution, amid the profuse contumely that has been so gratuitously heaped upon it from various, but for the most part, from interested quarters. Our local has, it is true, occasionally alluded to some act of unusual selfishness or spite practised towards it, but we have not deemed it desirable to occupy our leading columns with the matter.

The Institution although located here, is for the most part owned in Monroe, and other portions of the State. We knew some of the principal Stockholders and officers of the Bank, and from what we knew of them were satisfied that they were not the men to practice any imposition upon the public, and that time would better vindicate their character, and the institution which they represent, than anything we could say or do. The fact that it is now the only specie paying Bank in the State of Michigan, has we think sufficiently justified that conviction.

From the very opening of this institution it has seemed to be the deliberate purpose, not only of Detroit, (for that might have been anticipated,) but also of a portion of Southern Michigan to discredit and embarrass the Bank in every possible way.

The Free Press has made itself lugubrious with warnings against taking its issues, and some four weeks ago or more, while at the same time vouching most unhesitatingly for the solvency of certain Detroit Banks, since gone by the board, quoted Tecumseh as broken, and very sapiently suggested, that if it recollected aright, it had before warned its readers, to have nothing to do with it.

The Adrian Watchtower, (echoing the wishes and efforts of a certain broker there, who well satisfied of its responsibility, has been in hopes by discrediting its issue, to buy them up at a discount, and thus shave not the Bank, but the Public, out of a handsome sum,) was the first to put it upon its lists of Broken Banks, until it has since been quoted as broken by half the papers in the State; and has all along until within a week or two, contained, upon an average, from three to five warnings against it in each of its weekly issues.

It seems to us that these gentlemen of the press should begin to regard it as a little significant, that every one of the institutions which they have been willing to vouch for so vociferously, have gone by the board, while the one they have so pertinaciously sought to discredit, alone remains. While then there may be those who, not without apparent reason, may desire to be delivered from their friends, the "I told you so" of these financial Solons will begin, we fear, to lose somewhat of its potency, with the public.

We have been informed, that in one of the above instances at least, the want of confidence has arisen, not so much from a financial embarrassment on the part of the Bank, as otherwhere, and that its unsound condition was not discovered until after a very prompt, and as has been deemed by some a very prudent refusal on its part, to advance a loan for the relief of that embarrassment. So that after all, it would appear, that the dear public, who are so much advised and so often warned, some times honestly no doubt, but quite as often from interested motives, are just as likely to be humbugged in the one way as the other, and the only safe way that we can see is to be our own advisers, and to think, and act for ourselves

Hillsdale County Fair

We had the pleasure of being present at Hillsdale, on Wednesday of last week, which was the last day of their County Fair, and must express ours less much pleased with the show made in a county that is smaller, and comparatively so much newer than our own. It was held in a grove just east of the village and on the south bank of the St. Joseph, (which there takes its rise in Baw beese Lake, the foot of which is less than a mile above,) and the arrangement of the grounds was certainly well adapted to the purpose. The display of Fruit was really quite superior while that of vegetables and stock showed also a good degree of progress in this direction. A very fine horse was killed just below and while on his way to the ground in the morning, by checking him in too suddenly, thus throwing him over and breaking his neck.

The Jonesville and Hillsdale Fire Companies were out and made a fine show.—The Address by C. B. Fiske Esq., of Coldwater, we were not permitted to hear, as the iron horse came along just then, compelling us to leave, or remain twelve hours longer, which our other engagements would not permit us to do. We took the opportunity while there to visit the Hillsdale College Buildings, which are really very fine, and an ornament to the place and the state.

General News.

CHICAGO, Oct. 17.

The returns from Minnesota indicate the election of Ramsey, (Rep.) for Governor.

IOWA.—Twenty seven counties heard from. The indications are that the Republicans elect their ticket by 2000 maj.—There is a Democratic gain of 5000 since the Presidential election. The Republicans have a majority in the Senate. The House is in doubt.

Notwithstanding eastern suspensions, there is no excitement in any part of Illinois or Wisconsin, and no bank failures.

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.

The steamship Asia, from Liverpool on the morning of the 1st, arrived at 8 o'clock this A. M.

Her advices are mainly anticipated.—Our files, however, contain some items of interest.

The screw steamship Jason, left Southampton for New York, on the 1st, with upwards of 400 passengers.

The New Foundland line of steamers is temporarily suspended.

The Hong Kong correspondent of the London Times, says, that in regard to the blockade of the Canton river, it is understood that Admiral Seymour had been induced to adopt this course, in consequence of the American steamer Antelope having proceeded up the River as far as Whampoa, and it is the impression that the Americans and some other foreigners were desirous of forming a trade with Canton, to which it is said he would not object.

Letters from the Persian frontier say that insurrectionary movements had broken out in various places. It was reported in Paris that in consequence of recent persecutions of Europeans in Madagascar, a combined English and French Expedition against the Queen of that country was not improbable.

The Asia brought $20,000 in specie.—She reports having met on the third instant the steamship Europa from Boston, on the 5th, the Baltic from New York, on the 16th, the Persia from N. Y., and City of Washington from N. Y. all for Liverpool.

Nena Sahib was besieging the fortress of Lucknow in person. He had cut off the canals that supplied the citadel with water.

Recruiting for the army was progressing in England at the rate of over 1000 per week.

A report was current at Paris of an intended conference at Vienna, with respect to a settlement of the Danubian Principalities, and to the difference with Naples.

It is stated that the Emperor of Austria will visit the King of Prussia at Berlin.

Dispatches from Constantinople intimate that the early recall of D'Jemiel Bey, the Turkish Ambassador at Paris, had been resolved upon.

A Vienna letter says that the Porte is about to issue a circular to the Great Powers, refusing to consent to the union of the Principalities.

Terrible R. R. Accident

SYRACUSE, Oct. 16.

The accident on the Central Road was the most disastrous that has happened on that Road in many years. The cars were under full headway, and as the train approached Nine Mile Creek, between Warner station and Syracuse, the engine suddenly plunged off the track, darting down into the creek, some 15 or 20 feet. The coupling apparently broke instantly, and the first baggage car plunged over on the top of the engine. This was followed by the mail car and three passenger cars, all of which took the fearful plunge one after another. The cars were all well filled with passengers, and the catastrophe was so sudden that only one shriek was heard above the noise of the wheels, before all were heaped together in common ruin at the bottom of the gulf. The last car only remained on the track, and those who were fortunate enough to be on that car, instantly leaped to the rescue of the other passengers.

The scene presented was most truly awful. The mail car was turned bottom side up, and was found to be on fire having taken fire from the fire in the stove. The first passenger car was burned on one side, with front part buried in the water of the creek which had risen high in consequence of heavy rains. In this car Miss Brown of Toronto daughter of Mr. Brown, of the Toronto Globe was riding.

After most of the passengers had been taken out of the ruins, one of the persons searching found a shawl, which he pulled out. He then discovered a human being, and with the aid of others dragged forth the body of Miss Brown. She had been drowned in about 3 feet of water, and from a concussion on the head, had evidently been stunned in the collision.

Mr. Bronson, of New Brighton, Conecticut, had his bowels torn out by splinters of the seats, some slivers of mahogany were extracted by the surgeons to-day. His entrails were literally cut into mince meat, and although he still lives, his recovery is impossible. He is a man of strong build and constitution. He crawled out of the ruins on the track, literally holding his bowels with his hands.

The 2d car turned broadside to the train, and the third ran right through her about the middle, nearly cutting her in two. The third was smashed up about one-third its length, the passengers being crushed together in one mass.

The night was very dark and rainy.—The cause of the accident is said to be the giving way of the embankment of the creek, and the spreading of the track.

The following is a list of the killed and wounded:

Catherine Brown, aged 34; C. Bronson, New Britton; A. Townsend, Westfield; fatally injured, P. Bettinger, Baggage Master, Syracuse; C. McMaster, E. Roger, Kansas; Mrs. A. M. Bate, Toronto, J. Caldwell, Ind., S. Blunn, N. Y., G. A. Beal, Ind., all badly bruised; Mrs. L. Franklin, Warren, R. I., will not probably survive; P. Nolan, baggage man, recovery very doubtful; A. W. Deforrest, New Haven, Ct., will recover; P. Hodgeman, fireman Syracuse, in a dangerous condition; P. Hess, Durhamville, not seriously injured; J. Ogsbury, Palmyra Jefferson County, not badly bruised; Mrs. Sarah Havens, Onieda county N. Y.; C. Leach, Engineer, badly scalded and head cut; Mr. and Mrs. Mullen Rouse; Catharine Mullen, Albany; G. Bonner, Syracuse; all of whom were slightly bruised.

From the nature of the accident and the complete destruction of the cars, it is miraculous that out of 60 or 70 passengers, so few were fatally injured. There were several narrow escapes. One passenger Mr. Ogsbury of Jefferson, was in the 2d car, and the whole wood work, not a foot above his head, was splintered to atoms.

Fortunately, the third car jumped so high that it went through the second car above the heads of the passengers. Had it cut through a little lower, several more would have been killed.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.

The Government, having received official information of the outrages alleged to have been committed at Cape Haytien, on Capt. May's brig R. W. Tucker, Gen Cass has made a demand on Sec. Toucey for a war steamer, to be sent with dispatches to Cape Hayten, to demand the immediate release of the prisoners, and a full and satisfactory idemnification for the outrage. The steamer Fulton, which left a day or two since for the Gulf, in search of fillibusters, will be ordered to touch at Cape Haytien, if instructions can reach her before she gets out to sea. Meantime, the order was promptly issued for another steamer to get ready to depart on the same errand.

Advices received here, represent the New Grenada is disappointed in the convention lately agreed on, between Gen Herran and our Government, and that the President has been authorized to sell the Isthmus.

NEW YORK, Oct. 19.

At 10 o'clock yesterday evening as Mr. John Stevenson, an engineer, residing in East 27 st was quietly walking along Tenth Avenue, near the corner of 21st street, in company with his wife, he was set upon by three rowdies, one of whom without any provocation thereupon drew a dirk and stabbed him in the heart. The assassins who appeared to be boys 18 or 19 years, effected their escape.

NEW YORK, Oct. 20.

The announcement in a mornings paper of the suspension of Sampson & Baldwin, iron merchants is untrue.

The Coroner's inquest into the death of Mr. Stevenson, who was murdered in Tenth Avenue, on Saturday evening, fixes the crime on James Rogers, a youth of sixteen. He has not yet been arrested.

NEW YORK Oct. 21.

The Courier says that the banks discount a million and a half, to enable the country to move the produce of the west.

John E. Neblack, Democrat, was nominated for Congress in the 2d district.

LANSING, Oct. 18.

This morning, at 2 o'clock, the Moore Block, owned by Hon. Geo. W. Peck, was discovered to be on fire. The block was burned with most of its contents, and the whole village was saved by the vigilance of our citizens from destruction, by the arrest of the principal incendiary, who gave his name as Edmund Hawkins. The State Journal occupied this block, and everything pertaining to the office, including all their books and accounts were destroyed.

CHICAGO, Oct 19.

The most destructive conflagration that ever visited this city occurred here this morning. The loss by which is estimated at $600,000.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 20.

We have returns from over 50 counties and reported returns, believed to be reliable, from all the remaining counties, giving Mr. Chase a majority over Payne of full 2000.

DIED

In this Village, the 16th inst. of Pulmonary Consumption, Mrs CHARLES HEWITT, aged 42.

Mrs. Hewitt was a native of Methuen, Mass., and has been a resident of this village for the last twenty years, during which time she has, by her consistent, upright life, secured the esteem and confidence of all who knew her. As a wife, a mother, and a christian, she was above reproach. Her death, like her life, was peaceful and consistent. Her funeral was largely attended at the Presbyterian Church on Sunday morning, at which time an impressive and able sermon was preached by Rev. E. Cheever, of Patterson N. J. Com.

Volume Eight.

Two more issues will close the present volume of the Tecumseh Herald.—The 8th volume will commence Thursday, Nov. 5th. It is our intention to settle all our bills to that date, and expect our friends will do the same by us. As will be seen in the proceedings at the Printer's Convention, all have agreed to do cash business; we intend the ticket and will hereafter consider it as sacred. All persons owing us, will receive their bills, and we hope they will be cheerfully paid, otherwise their names will be erased from our books.

List of Good Money.

The Bank of Tecumseh.

☞ Abram Heller is receiving his Fall and Winter stock of Gent's Furnishing Goods His assortment is large, and comprises many beautiful styles. A complete fit can be manufactured at his establishment on short notice and at very low prices. We speak the truth when we say his stock is well selected, to meet the demands of our market. He proposes to do work to 100 good sewers, in spite of hard times. A call at his clothing store will do you good.

☞ The new Directors of the M. S. & N. I. R. R, passed through our village on the 19th inst, We understand they have been to Jackson, to make arrangements for the completion of this branch; which will be done as soon as possible.

☞ The new time table will be found at the head of this column.

☞ Many of the manufacturing establishments of this village are strongly inclined to 'close shop" for the winter—We hope they will, if possible, abandon this idea By giving their employees enough to live through this winter, they will save much suffering We find it hard to prosecute our business, but shall 'stick' to the Herald until we are to poor to issue a half sheet. So far our friends have given us a liberal patronage, for which we are very thankful.

☞ Wheat is selling in small quantities at 80 cts.

☞ Don't forget the Educational Convention, which is to be held at the Union School, in this village, on Saturday next

☞ We received a call from C. D Y Alexander, of the Herald, Lima, Ind., who was on a flying visit from Napoleon. Called to see his health improving

☞ See George W. Elliot's advertisement for Agents headed, "A Book for every Man's Library."

☞ We call the attention of our readers in general and of the afflicted in particular, to the advertisement of Bragg & Brogan, in another column The Arctic Liniment, prepared by Dr Bragg, is recommended as the best article of the kind in the world, and we believe is destined to supersede all similar preparations. It has not recently been introduced to the public, but has long been successfully used in private practice, and was thoroughly tested and approved by the late Dr. Elisha Kent, on the Grinnell Arctic Expidition. Dr. Bragg has for years enjoyed a well earned and widely extended reputation for his medical preparations, which is of itself sufficient guarantee of the value of the article now advertised.

☞ A young snow storm visited us on Tuesday night, which made things look wintry.

☞ The Tecumseh Band have volunteered their services, at the Educational Convention, on Saturday,

☞ The Town Board will meet at Stephen Wood's office, on Saturday, Oct.

Educational Mass Meeting at Tecumseh

☞ citizens will not forget the Educational mass meeting at the Union School House on Saturday next, to commence at 10 o'clock, A. M., a special notice of which will be found in another column Adrian and Clinton Schools will come in on the morning trains, and a large attendance from the country is confidently expected. We have no doubt our citizens will evince their usual hospitality in making the proper arrangements for the entertainment of their guests.

☞ Pratt Bank, Buffalo, re-opened its doors on Saturday and transacted business as usual, paid specie for its notes.

The effect of throwing out.

Chicago is now reaping advantage from the short-sighted policy of St Louis upon the one hand, and Detroit upon the other. Notwithstanding the closeness of the times, Chicago is now doing a heavy business in groceries, boots and shoes, domestics, staves and hardware, crockery and dry-goods, for the reason that Missouri and Michigan are trading with her. Country traders are neglecting to pay St. Louis, where they owe money, because their currency received in the ordinary course of business, will not pay their debts there, and they are going to Chicago, where their currency will buy goods. Michigan is doing the same thing. No longer ago than Saturday last, an old dealer of this city informed us that some of his best customers had for the first time gone to Chicago to buy, solely because they found themselves unable to pass Western money at Detroit, except at a disastrous shave.

Certain unprincipled money shavers, who call themselves brokers, and make pretences of understanding money, make matters worse, by decrying the currency of solvent Banks, for the sake of buying it up, at a shave. They issue lying circulars, intended only to subserve their own personal ends, and persuade uneasy and careless business men in the country to put faith in them, to the manifest detriment and derangement of trade, and to the great advantage of Chicago and Milwaukee. These very same shavers and swindlers, send home the currency which they buy at from 15 to 40 per cent. discount, and realize it in gold, at not over 2 per cent discount Their circulars are a pestilance, and should be burned up by every honest man. We must now turn over a new leaf, or the West will get a large start.—Det. Adv.

Singular detection of Criminals.

We the other day stated that Wm Dutro and Wm. Barrows, charged with the robbery of the store of Anderson & Bro of Tecumseh, had been arrested at Toledo The Ann Arbor Journal learns through private sources, the circumstances of the arrest of Dutro and Barrows which are these: J D Kieff was returning a few days since from Detroit via Toledo. Passing hastily along the streets of the latter city he was accosted by a pedlar who wished to sell him some jewelry.

Glancing at the man's wares he thought he recognized a familiar looking locket, and opening it he found it contained the portrait of his own daughter. Other articles were then recognized, and remarking that if he could find a friend of whom he could obtain some money he would purchase, he left the pedler's stand and went in pursuit of an officer On being arrested the pedlar, who honestly came in possession of the goods, gave information of the stopping place of the men of whom he bought. The criminals were then absent from their room, but on their return were arrested.

Barrows, we understand, confessed to the robberies, and gave information of a large share of Kniff's goods These goods were found secreted in Sylvania, and were in charge of an old man and his wife, who delivered them over on the demand of the officers. Barrows' father lived until recently in Manchester. It is thought that these arrests may lead to the exposure and breaking up of a desperate gang—Det. Adv.

FIRE.—Messrs Fish's brewery in Jackson, was burned to the ground on Wednesday morning last. Loss $2,000 partially insured.

☞ Three of the professed agents of the Pharos Lightning Rod Company are now in jail at Howell, awaiting their trial on the charge of up rods which are said to be spurious.

The city of Jackson is to be lit with gas for the first time this evening.

Eighteen thousand bushels of grain were destroyed by fire at Toledo on Wednesday morning.

The Chicago (Ill.) Democrat learns that there are 40,000 head of cattle to come forward to that city, and thence to the East, as soon as the financial means for removing them can be obtained. At $40 per head, this would amount to $1,600,000.

CONSOLIDATION

Emerson's Magazine

AND

Putnam's Monthly.

40,000 Subscribers to Start With

The Publishers are happy to announce that in the union of these favorite magazines, the best literary and artistic talent of both publications has been secured, and the most attractive features of each will be retained in the consolidated work.

It will aim to present in its pages the choicest productions of American thinkers and writers, and the best efforts of American artists

It will be purely national in its character; in its criticisms it will aim to be just and truthful, and will be earnest to preserve and cultivate that wholesome moral and religious tone so highly cherished by the American public, and so essential to the welfare of the race.

We shall endeavor, by every means the extensive resources now at our command, to make a Magazine that in the richness of its literary contents, and in the beauty and performance of its pictorial illustrations, shall entertain any publications ever before produced in this country

The new issue commences with the October number, which is now ready. It is filled with the choicest productions of some of the most brilliant writers of the day and is embellished with forty-four splendid original engravings. It appears in a new dress, embracing an elegant classical design on the cover, and the entire work presents the most attractive appearance. It is pronounced by all who have seen it to be the most beautiful specimen of a magazine ever issued in this country.

PRICE $3 a YEAR. CLUB PRICE, $2.

The Great Library Offer.

The combined issue of EMERSON'S MAGAZINE and PUTNAM'S MONTHLY starts with a circulation of over FORTY THOUSAND copies, and we are determined to spare no expense in any of its departments to place it at the head of American Magazines. With this view, we now make the following extraordinary offer. To any person who will get up a club of twenty-four subscribers at the club price, either at one or more post offices, we will present a splendid Library consisting of Forty Large Bound Volumes, embracing the most popular works in the market.—Any one wishing to obtain such a set as a specimen, can easily form such a club, in almost any section. A copy of this number together with a full and full description of the Library, will be forwarded on receipt of 25 cents

Corn and Corn Fodder.

In spite of the lateness of the plant ing, and forebodings of those who had given up all hope of a corn crop the warm weather of Sept. has brought this important crop through so far, and it promises to give a fair yield. Of the grain itself we have nothing to say at present. We shall treat principally of the best modes of preserving stalks, and making the best use of them.—An acre will yield from 1 to 3 tons of stalks, according to the quality of the corn and the luxuriance of growth.—The field that grows corn from ten to twelve feet high will certainly grow more than the same number of acres where the corn is not over 6 or 8 feet in height. We believe it is pretty well settled, that nothing is to be made by topping corn, but that the right plan to harvest corn is to cut it off as close as may be to the roots. For the purpose of rendering the fodder of the best quality, as many hills as can be conveniently got together should be put in each "shock." The larger they are the better, for they will stand long enough to be cured and the turning of them to take off ears, exposes them to the air for curing as much as spreading out hay, or the loading or unloading of it.

When the ears are removed, the stalks, if not taken into the barn, should be immediately stacked. These stacks ought not to be made of stalks alone, but should be composed of layers of oat straw, or if there be no oat straw there is probably some of wheat or barley, alternate with the layers of stalks. Each layer of stalks, which may be a wagon load should have at least four quarts of salt, with a handful of lime strewed over it. This will keep them sweet, and prevent them from sweating or moulding, and the stock will eat them much cleaner and more greedily, especially where they are fed without cutting. The stacks of cornstalks should be thatched, and as carefully protected from the snow and rain as hay. They should be built so as to keep out the wet, and when once opened a whole stack should be at once hurried under cover. By pushing this system, the stock of the farm will get the whole benefit of one of the best crops we have and the farmer himself will be able to make more beef, more mutton, and more wool off an acre than he can otherwise. The mixing of the cornstalks, with straw when in a somtwhat green state, as they ought to be when first brought out of the field to be stacked, renders the straw still more palatable for cattle, at least it will be found that they eat it better. The sprinkling of salt plentifully on the cornstalks, has the effect of keeping them from heating and at the same time, the dampness engendered in the stack dissolves it, and it also makes the whole mass better relished by the animals. That lime has the same effect, we need only point to the experience detailed in this volume of the Farmer, where it has been tried in curing moist clover.

No attempt should be made to feed cornstalks without cutting them, and we believe that where they can be both cut and steamed, they would pay well. One of the best machines for cutting cornstalks well and thoroughly is the one made by Messrs. Felts of Brooklyn, and which we believe is known by the Cummings patent. It cuts them both rapidly and thoroughly, leaving no peices of stalk uncut.—Where the stalks are not needed for food, when cut with straw they make the best litter for stall animals there is, as it absorbs a vast quantity of liquid manure which would be wasted or evaported. At this season, even though hay and straw are both plentiful and cheap, the prices of meat point out that the utmost care should be taken to preserve cornstalk fodder.

CELERY SAUCE FOR FOWLS AND GAME.—Take a large bunch of celery, wash and pare it clean, cut it in small thin peices, and boil it gently in a little water till tender; then add some beaten mace, nutmeg, pepper and salt, thickened with a peice of butter rolled in flour, then boil it up, and pour it into a dish.

Selecting Seed Corn.

Farmers will remember that for two or three years past a great deal of corn came up badly. Last spring, especially, much of it "rotted" in the ground. The loss from this cause is hundreds of thousands the present season. On our own ground (with some fourteen acres in corn) the loss was next to nothing. The same is true with some others we could mention. What is the reason of the difference. Why does the seed in onefield grow and in another not?—That is just what we want to come at.

One great cause of the rotting of the seed is that is was never well ripened. Another reason is that it is badly dried. Poorly ripened and badly dried seed is very easily injured by fermentation, and a very little fermentation and moulding will destroy vitality. Last autumn we had the best, largest and ripest ears carefully selected and braided together by the husks in tresses, and hung in a dry place. This was planted, and notwithstanding the drenching rains and mud, all came up—none missing hill or stalk—and the field is noted as one of the best in the country. The same has been the experience of some others. Those who made no selection and took no care of their seed, have had "very bad luck." Another field was planted with King Philip corn, not trussed; but as this sort ripens so early and perfectly, this operation appears not necessary. It came up as the other.

Let farmers select the best and ripest ears, and either truss and hang them up, or place them, in the ear, where they will dry thoroughly, (unless it be some very early, quick-ripening sorts,) and there will be better success and better luck with the corn crop.—Country Gentleman.

Burying Potatoes.

When a farmer has a dry piece of land near his house a small knoll or hill, and has a large crop of potatoes, which he desires to keep till spring, it is better to bury them than to store them in his cellar besides being cheaper and easier in most cases They will keep pretty well, when buried in any manner, provided they be not exposed to dampness and frost but the following plan is a good one:

First dig the pit on soil that no rain will settle in and wet the potatoes. Four or five feet deep will do, in an oblong shape. Then, as soon as your potatoes are thoroughly dried, take the longest straw you have, and line the sides and bottom of the pit, six inches thick at least. Then fill with popatoes and raise the heap as high as the potatoes will lie, without spreading beyond the limits of the pit, which will be in the centre some two feet above the level of the soil in a common sized pit. Then cover with straw, the butts resting on the ground, and in a manner that would shed rain if not covered, when the whole should be covered with earth, firmly packed, and in a roof like shape, and at least 18 inches or two feet deep on all sides. On top of the earth, then place a couple wide boards, nailed together in the form of a roof, and we will warraht your potatoes to come out in the following spring in the best condition. —Rural American.

TO DRY PUMPKIN.—Cut it round horizontally in tolerable thin slices, peel them and hang them on a line in a tolerable warm room. When perfectly dry, put them away for use.—When perfectly dry, put it to soak over night; next day, pour off the water, put on fresh water, stew and use it as usual, &c.

Another, and some think a much better way, is to boil and sift the pumpkin, then spread it out thin in tin plates, and dry hard in a warm oven. It will keep good all the year round, and a little piece boiled up in rolls will make a batch of pies.

Patent Medicines.

ONE DOLLAR
WILL BUY

ONE OF THE BEST PURGATIVE AND LIVER MEDICINES ever before the public, namely DR. SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR or LIVER REMEDY, that ever was a Cathartic (either mineral or vegetable) that can be made so pleasant to take, as to not only a Cathartic, but a Liver Remedy, and like best on the Liver to effect its morbid condition the stomach and bowels to carry off the matter that accumulates in them, performs [effects] without any of the painful sufferings experienced in the operations of most cathartics. It strengthens the system at the same time that it purges it, and when taken daily in moderate doses will strengthen and build it up with unusual rapidity.

DR. SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR (compounded entirely from new articles of medicine, namely, Gums:

Some idea of the strength of these gums may be formed when it is known that one bottle of the Invigorator contains as much strength as one hundred doses of Calomel, without any of its deleterious effects.

Though possessing rare medical powers, these Gums have been but little known to Physicians and never used in their prescriptions until used in the form of the Invigorator which met with such unprecedented success as to induce the proprietor to offer it as a family medicine tried and known in its effects. It has rarely ever failed to cure Liver Complaints in their worst forms.

INDIGESTION being caused by a deranged Liver is cured when the Liver is excited to action.

JAUNDICE is caused by an improper action of the Liver, and as a proof that the Invigorator rectifies this disease, let any one troubled with Jaundice take the Invigorator regularly one week, and their skin will begin to assume its original color.

COSTIVENESS can be permanently cured by the Invigorator. Take it in small doses on retiring and it assists nature in her operations. By gradually diminishing the dose, the bowels are left in a healthy and active state, and work as regularly as clock work.

SICK HEADACHE is very soon relieved by taking a double dose of the Invigorator, which corrects all acidity and sourness of the stomach.

For an over-loaded stomach it has no equal, as it relieves all oppressive or uneasy feeling after eating heartily. For a sure remedy in nervousness generally, all who use it speak in the highest terms.

DR. SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR came to us recommended as a cure for Liver Complaints, and all diseases arising from a Diseased Liver. The testimonials of so many of our Physicians in its favor, induced us to try it, and now conviction is certain that it is one of the greatest blessings ever given as Dyspeptics, for it made a complete cure before the first bottle was taken, and no we can eat anything edible without trouble, while before coubling both the highest food would digest, and often that gave pain. Now what we want to say to all our readers is, if Liver Complaints or Dyspepsia trouble you, do not fail to try this the greatest remedy in the world.—State Fact.

We take infinite pleasure in recommending this medicine as a preventative for FEVER and AGUE, CHILL, FEVER, and all FEVERS of a BILIOUS TYPE. It operates with certainty, and thousands are willing to testify to its wonderful virtues.

There has never been tried in our family a remedy which has met with such unbounded success in the cure of disease incident to children, as DR. SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR; nor is it alone for diseases of children that we use it; for it acts as a Cathartic so mildly and gently, and at the same time operates the system so thoroughly that we think we are doing a service to all in advising them when they need medicine, to try this remedy. There are cases that have come under our notice where great benefit has been received in diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels, where all other remedies failed to give relief. It had become so useful in our family that we will not be without it.—Jacksonville, Ala. Republican.

THE SECRET INFIRMITIES OF
YOUTH AND MATURITY.

Just Published, Gratis, the 25th, Thousand.

A FEW WORDS ON THE RATIONAL TREATMENT, without Medicine, of Spermatorrhœa or Local Weakness, Nocturnal Emissions, Genital and Nervous Debility, Premature Decay of the System, Impotency, and Impediments to Marriage generally, by B. DE LANEY, M. D.

The important fact that the many alarming complaints originating in the imprudence and solitude of youth, may be easily removed WITHOUT MEDICINE, is in this small tract clearly demonstrated; and the entirely new and highly successful treatment, as adopted by the Author, fully explained, by means of which every one is enabled to cure HIMSELF perfectly and at the least possible cost, thereby avoiding all the advertised nostrums of the day.

CLEANSE THE BLOOD AND CURE THE SICK.

Dayalds, Fathers, Mothers, Physicians, Philanthropists, read their Effects, and judge of their Virtues.

Headache, Sick Headache, Foulness of the Stomach, Piles, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite.

Dr. J. C. AYER, Sir:—I have been repeatedly cured of the worst headache by taking two pills, and one of your Pills in small doses will relieve my stomach when they cleanse it effectually. It pays well once to know it, and therefore is worth knowing.

Yours with great respect, ED. W. PEARLE,
Clerk of Senate Chamber.

Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaints.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 1856.

Sir: I have used your Pills in my general practice ever since you made them, and candidly say they are the best cathartic we employ. Their regulating action on the liver is quick and decided, controlled by they are an admirable remedy for derangements of that organ. Indeed, I have seldom found a case of bilious disease so obstinate that it did not readily yield to them.

Fraternally yours, ALONZO BALL, M. D.,
Physician of the Marine Hospital

Dysentery, Relax, and Worms.

POST OFFICE, HARTLAND, LIV. CO., MICH., Sept. 19, '56.

DR. AYER: Your Pills are the perfection of medicine. They have done my wife more good than I can tell you. She had been sick and pining away for months. We off to be doctored at great expense, but got no better. She then commenced taking your Pills, which soon cured her by expelling large quantities of worms (dead) from her body. They afterwards cured her and one two bottles of bloody dysentery. One of our neighbors had been at my wife cured him with five doses of your Pills, which others around us paid from five to twenty dollars doctor bills, and lost much time, without being cured entirely even then. Such a medicine as yours, which is actually good and honest, will be prized here.

GEO. J. GRIFFIN, Postmaster.

Indigestion and Impurity of the Blood.

From Rev. J. V. Himes, Pastor of Advent Church, Boston.

DR. AYER: I have used your Pills with extraordinary success in my family and among those I am called to visit in distress. To regulate the organs of digestion and purify the blood they are the very best remedy I have ever known, and I can confidently recommend them to my friends.

Yours, J. V. HIMES.

WARSAW, WYOMING CO., N. Y., Oct. 24, 1856.

DEAR SIR: I am using your Cathartic Pills in my practice, and find them an excellent purgative to cleanse the system, and purify the blood of its vices.

JOHN G. MEACHAM, M. D.

Erysipelas, Scrofula, King's Evil, Tetter, Tumors, and Salt Rheum.

From a Forwarding Merchant of St. Louis, Mo.

DR. AYER: Your Pills are the purest and best cathartic we can use in our business. They have cured me of the worst case of erysipelas, which settled in my limbs and brought me to the verge of the grave. Nothing else that I took, or all that I took together, did me half the good. Your Pills cured me entirely, and I have since recommended them to many others, with the most astonishing results. They are the best blood purifier we have ever known.

Yours truly, WM. H. McCLELLAN.

For Dropsy, Plethora, or kindred complaints, requiring an active purge, they are an excellent remedy.

For Costiveness or Constipation, as a Dinner Pill, they are agreeable and effectual.

Fits, Suppression, Paralysis, Infianmation, and even Deafness, and Partial blindness, have been cured by the alterative action of these Pills.

Most of the pills in market contain Mercury, which, though a valuable remedy in skilful hands, is dangerous in a public pill, from the dreadful consequences which frequently follow its incautious use. These contain no mercury or mineral substance whatever.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL,
FOR THE RAPID CURE OF
COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, INFLUENZA, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION,

and for the relief of consumptive patients in advanced stages of the disease.

We need not speak to the public of its virtues. Throughout every town, and almost every family in the American States, its wonderful cures of pulmonary complaints have made it known. Nay, few are the families in any civilized country on this continent but have some personal experience of its effects; and there are few communities any where, that have not among them some living trophy of its victory over the subtle and dangerous diseases of the throat and lungs. While this is the most powerful antidote yet known to man for the formidable and dangerous diseases of the pulmonary organs, it is also the pleasantest and safest remedy that can be employed for infants and young persons. Parents should have it in store against the insidious enemy that steals upon them unprepared. We have abundant grounds to believe the CHERRY PECTORAL saves more lives by preventing consumption it prevents than those it cures. Keep it by you, and cure your colds while they are curable, and protect them until no human skill can master the insidious ranker that, fastened on the vitals, eats your life away. All know the dreadful fatality of lung disorders, and how they know too the virtues of this remedy, we need no more than to assure them it is with unabated confidence we offer it to the afflicted, sure to produce the most perfect possible, and thus afford those who need it the best agent which our skill can furnish for their relief.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

TO all persons afflicted with Sexual Diseases, such as SPERMATORRHŒA, SEMINAL WEAKNESS, IMPORTANCE, GONORRHŒA, GLEET, SYPHILIS, the Vice of ONANISM, or Self Abuse, &c., &c.

The HOWARD ASSOCIATION, in view of the awful destruction of human life, and the deception practised upon the unfortunate victims of these diseases by Quacks, have directed their consulting Surgeon, as a CHARITABLE duty, to give MEDICAL ADVICE GRATIS, to all persons, (post paid) who apply by letter, with a description of their condition, (age, occupation, habits of life, &c.,) and in cases of extreme poverty and suffering, to FURNISH MEDICINE FREE OF CHARGE.

The Howard Association is a benevolent Institution, established by special enactment, for the relief of the sick and distressed, afflicted with "Virulent and Loathsome Diseases." It has now a surplus of funds, which the Directors have voted to expend in advertising the above notice. It is needless to add that the Association commands the highest Medical skill of the age, and furnish the most approved modern treatment.

Just Published, by the Association, a Report on Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, the vice of Onanism, Masturbation, or Self Abuse, and other Diseases of the Sexual Organs, by the Consulting Surgeon, which will be sent by mail, (in a sealed envelope) FREE OF CHARGE, on the receipt of two Stamps for postage.

Address, Dr. GEO. R. CALHOUN, Consulting Surgeon, Howard Association, No. 2 South NINTH Street, Philadelphia, Pa., by order of the Directors.

EZRA D. HARTWELL, President.
GEO FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

A Retired Physician, 75 years of age, having lost his Father, two Brothers, Mother, Son-in-law, Nephews and Nieces, by that dreadful disease, Consumption, and being with a Consumption himself, determined to visit the East Indies, Egypt and Europe, in search of health, he discovered a Preventive and Cure for Colds, Coughs, Bronchitis, Consumption, Nervous Debility and Asthma. He was cured immediately; he returned to his Relatives, who inherited the discovery in connection with his son have cured thousands in their practice, curing thousands of cases considered hopeless by others. Volume Eight.

One more issue will close the present volume of the Tecumseh Herald—The 8th Volume will commence Thursday, Nov. 5th. It is our intention to settle all our bills to that date, and expect our friends will do the same by us. As will be seen in the proceedings at the Printer's Convention, all have agreed to do cash business; we signed the ticket and will hereafter consider it as sacred. All persons owing us, will receive their bills, and we hope they will be cheerfully paid, otherwise their names will be erased from our books.

List of Good Money.

The Bank of Tecumseh.

☞ We are obliged to work a half sheet this week, on account of the non-arrival of paper.

☞ Miss T. J. Lorey has received her Fall and Winter supply of Millinery, which she offers to her customers at a bargain.

☞ The new Bridge over Evans creek is completed, and pronounced by all 'just the thing.'

☞ Emerson & Stocking are refusing money on account, but are taking all kind of produce. Fred is intending to marry soon, and is anxious to secure a supply of vittables.

☞ Fifty eight loads of Wheat were sold in the streets of Jonesville, on Tuesday last.

PAPER FOR SALE.—We learn that the proprietor of the Maumee Anchet desires to dispose of that paper. A good opening for somebody—industriously and editorial ly inclined.

☞ The total number of failures in New York City since the first of August, is about 900, and the liabilities are estimated at ninety millions. During the whole of the revulsion in 1837, the number of failures reported in the same city was about 500, but the returns under the Bankrupt Law in 1841, showed that five thousand took the benefit of that act, showing liabilities amounting to nearly fifty millions of dollars.

QUICK WORK.—At a late fire in Cincinnati, an individual who happened to be at the door of the steam fire engine house, thus describes the effort: "The firemen, who were sitting near the stove, sprang instantly to their different posts; one applied a lighted match to the prepared fuel beneath the boiler; another lit the lamps; others got ready the excited and impatient horses, who started from their stalls at the first peal of the bell; and in precisely one minute and twenty-eight seconds the engine started from the house into the street."

Tecumseh Bank

This Bank is still running, and is the only one now in the State paying specie. Well, this is laughable. The Detroit Banks kicked it out months ago as unworthy of credit and now it is alive and kicking, while the breath has been knocked out of them and their doors closed. The Banks in Detroit have taken a course that merits the condemnation of every man—they discarded all Western money, which they had received it on deposit, would have been far better for them and the business men of Detroit. We cannot regard the Bankers of Detroit as the Solons of the world, and we do not know that any one will shed tears over their suspension. Western money is now good while Detroit bills are selling at 30 per cent discount.—Jonesville Tel.

☞ Bayard Taylor states that the fishermen on the coast of Norway are supplied with wood from the tropics, by the Gulf Stream.

"SLANG."—"Dry up!" was an expressive phrase, but the boys in the streets have found a better one. Now they say, "Suspend!"

☞ A Wisconsin correspondent of the Chester Union states that in going from Prairie du Chien to La Crosse, a few days since a singular scene was presented on the steamboat. At one end of the long saloon, a clergyman was preaching to a small crowd gathered around him; in the middle gambling was in busy progress; and at the other extremity of the saloon there was dancing and dancing!

☞ The Philadelphia ladies, on Friday last, came out in their full suits of winter furs.

☞ A correspondent proposes that the Common Council of our city should vote at least $100,000 to be raised by a tax or loan, to furnish immediate means for transportation to the most favored localities in the West, to as many persons as are desirous of leaving the city to seek employment there. There is a vast amount of profitable work to be obtained in the young and growing Western and Northern States of the Union, by those who cannot obtain it here. The idea seems a good one for the winter looks dark and gloomily to the poor.—N. Y. Mirror.

☞ Look out for counterfeit ½ and 1 Dollars! In these stringent specie times the sight of change should not relax the vigilance of our dealers in looking out for bogus coin. The counterfeiters are taking advantage of the position of financial affairs and the general discredit which has befallen paper money, to circulate their "pewter." Other cities are suffering from their "base issues"—let our merchants be on their guard.

CONTRACTING.—Under the pressure of the times, the Chicago papers are talking seriously of reducing the size of their pages one column each, during the winter, as advertising is very light, and the publishers are not disposed to fill up at an extra expense the vacuum caused by the diminution of paying matter in their advertising columns. We believe that a similar reduction has been proposed in Buffalo.

HOW IT AFFECTS NEWSPAPERS.—Hard times among the newspapers is becoming as palpable as in any other branch of industry. The St Louis Daily Intelligencer has been united with the Evening News of the same city, and the joint issue will hereafter be published as an afternoon paper. The three Republican papers in Dubuque, Iowa, are to be formed into one. The Republican and Whig, at Quincy, Illinois, were also to be joined in one, and the St Paul times and Minnesotian are likely to follow suit soon. In Philadelphia, the Times and Sun have been merged in one paper.

THE GIRL AND HER FILLY.—A Miss Adcock, of Henderson Grove, Ill., took the first premium (a gold watch worth $150,) at the recent Horse Exhibition at Galesburgh, in that State. She rode without a saddle, and dismounted to show that she was not retained by a stirrup.—Her training was stylish, and elicited unbounded applause.

ERROR.—We quoted Wheat last week, a little above the market, but as none came to town, it made no difference, except a few criticisms.

☞ A heavy team of cars, are loading at Toledo, with goods, marked A. Anderson & Co., which will be displayed, in "a Few Days."

☞ All Howard gives two Concerts, at Coldwater, on Saturday and Monday evenings next. We may expect a treat from him yet.

From the Detroit Advertiser 11th.

Children Murdered for Money.

A gentleman named Johnson, recently moved to Fentonville, with his family, consisting of a wife and three children—the oldest of the latter but eight years of age.—Not having got all his beds up, the wife remained at the hotel over night, while Mr. Johnson went to his house with the children and was accompanied by a boy named George Colwell, about 12 years of age. About 8 o'clock in the evening, two young men came in asking for Mr. Johnson, saying they were going to his father's house, a short distance from there. On receiving a pressing invitation they consented to remain over night and go with him in the morning to see the old gentleman. Mr. Johnston slept that night in the bed with his two little girls, and the boy slept with Colwell. The young men had a bed made up on the floor, between the other two.

During the night Mr. Johnson heard one of his girls cry out "Pa!" and at the same time received a blow on the side of his head. He was partially stunned, and the next he remembered, he was running after a man who was attempting to escape by the door.—The man turned again, and struck at him with some instrument.

Mr. J. followed the fellow some distance without being able to overtake him, and therefore returned to the house. On entering the room where he had been sleeping, a horrible sight met his eyes—one of the little girls and the Colwell boy lay dead before him; and the other little girl and boy insensible from the effect of their injuries. The agonized father screamed "murder!" and called in the neighbors. Several came in, and on examination the following particulars were disclosed.

The first body examined was that of young Colwell. He had received a blow, apparently from an axe. His skull was split entirely open, and his brains had all run out. The little boy who lay beside Colwell, had been struck twice in the head by an axe or a hatchet, and once in the abdomen. One of the little girls who slept with her father, had received several wounds in the head and body from a similar instrument. She was dead. The other girl had a cut in the head, apparently from a slanting blow from the axe, which had taken a portion of the scalp. The father himself had received two blows on the top of the head, and a severe cut inside of his hand. The little girl is doing well, but at four o'clock last night, when our informant left, the boy was not expected to recover. Suspicion rests upon two young fellows who had recently had some difficulty about some gambling operations. Mr. Johnson had obtained a warrant. It is supposed that they were aware of it, and took this means of gaining possession of it, killing the children that there should be no evidence against them.

CONSOLIDATION OF

Emerson's Magazine AND Putnam's Monthly.

40,000 Subscribers to Start With

The Publishers are happy to announce that in the union of these two magazines, the best literary and artistic talent of both periodicals has been secured and the most attractive features of each will be retained in the consolidated work.

It will aim to present in its pages the choicest productions of American thinkers and writers, and the best efforts of American artists.

It will be purely National in its character, in its criticisms it will aim to be just and truthful, and will be careful to preserve and cultivate that wholesome moral and religious tone so highly cherished by the American public and so essential to the welfare of the race.

We shall endeavor, by a careful use of the extensive resources now at command, to make a Magazine that in the richness of its literary contents, and in the beauty and performance of its pictorial illustrations, shall outrival any publications ever before projected in this country.

The new issue commences with the October number which is now ready. It is filled with the choicest productions of some of the most brilliant writers of the day, and is embellished with forty-four splendid original engravings. It is printed in a new style, engraving an elegant title and design on the cover, and the entire work presents the most attractive appearance. It is pronounced by all who have seen it to be the most beautiful specimen of a magazine ever issued in this country.

We are Growing Old

We are growing old—the speedy sea
A dark, and change will come;
Autumn flowers so sensitive now,
Will not bear winter's chilling blow.

We are growing old—yet will our hearts
Be just as young and gay,
As when they were in youth's bright morn,
In life's unclouded day?

And will the eyes—those mirrors eyes
Look old and faded too?
Those ever-bright cheeks so young, so fair,
Light up with strong glow?

Ah! yes, the flower will lose its charms,
And droop, decay, and die,
But, oh! 'twill rise and bloom again
Bright as the glowing sky.

Then what if we are growing old,
No change our heart shall know,
They'll beat with rapture and we'll feel
That God has made them so.

The Earthquake at St Louis

(From the St. Louis Republican, 9th.)

Yesterday morning the city was visited by one of those mighty convulsions of nature which set the world to thinking.—Two distinct shocks of an earthquake were sensibly felt from the one end of our city to the extremest verge. Majestic edifices roared by the labor of man, rocked upon their bases, the earth moved from her accustomed rectitude and quaked beneath us, the river was raised in a tumult, and many men shook with fear and trembling.

The evening of Wednesday was calm, and the moon reflected extraordinary brilliancy upon the city. Towards night a slight humidity gathered over us, and later this increased to a dense fog. Men went to their peaceful slumbers and wotted not whereof they awoke at early cock-crow. But so it was: at a few minutes after four o'clock half the citizens of St Louis were agog, with their heads jutting from the windows of their apartments, or rushing into the streets en dishabille, terrified at the confusion which they experienced, and which seemed to compass them.

The first shock was distinctly felt.—There were but few persons whose slumbers were so heavy that they did not experience it. From such persons as we conversed with, and from our own sensations, we believe it was felt about ten minutes after four P. M., lasting about thirty seconds. Its first effect was not of great force, but as it rolled along it grew gradually stronger, until in its heavings it seemed to be rocking to and fro. Then people awoke as their windows rattled, as their beds swayed, and as the light articles which mounted their mantelpieces fell to the floor. There was a grand rush to the windows, and heads hung out, with alarm depicted upon the countenance which distinguished them; other people found their way into the middle of the streets, where they felt somewhat more secure until the thing was over.

A second shock was felt shortly after but there are no two people who agree as to the length of time which elapsed between the two. It was not very violent, the more especially as compared with the former quake; its force, however, was sufficient to make the still waking people feel the tremulous motion of their beds.

The accompaniment of the shocks can be placed in but one aspect of resemblance as to ordinary noises. There was a great rumbling, like the passage of a heavy vehicle over pavements, while the shock itself may be aptly likened to the effect produced by the working of a steam engine, which after laboring to pass the centre lets itself gently down.

We have not yet heard of any great amount of actual damage done. Some few small articles were broken in many houses by falling. A three story house occupied by Mr Landry, on Washington street, was cracked from top to bottom.—Bells were rung in several houses, as for instance, in that of Dr. McPheeters, and some few people on their more natural waking had temporarily lost their senses, as for example, one gentleman of the bar who, living near the college, could not with all his eyes discover the steeple.

The shocks were distinctly felt, not only in the city but all around. It seemed to come in a southerly, or perhaps southwesterly direction, extending, as we learn, for miles on either side of us. The wide prairies of Illinois felt the jar, the cities below us experienced its effect, and perhaps more forcibly than we.

Tecumseh Union School Mass-Meeting, &c.

The Educational Mass Meeting, which was held under the auspices and direction of the State Teacher's Association, in our village on Saturday last, convened at the Union School Hall as proposed at 10 o'clock A. M. A special train brought up the Adrian School consisting of about five hundred scholars under the charge of Prof. Hubbard and the other Teachers. Clinton, Macon, Ridgeway and Franklin were also largely represented and our own schools, under the charge of Prof Lawton and the other Teachers, numbering about four hundred pupils, were also in attendance, so that upon the opening of the morning exercises there were from six hundred to one thousand scholars in actual attendance, besides the Teachers and other persons.

Addresses were made by Profs. Lawton and Hubbard, also by Prof. Eaton, Superintendent of the Toledo High Schools, Rev J. M. Gregory, Editor of the Journal of Education, and Judge C. A. Stacy of Tecumseh. Judge Beaman of Adrian was prevented by ill health from attendance.

The schools and visitors then adjourned from the School building to a collation at Union Hall, after which there was a spontaneous assemblage, consisting indiscriminately of students and citizens which were again addressed by Messrs Stacy and Baxter.

The day was mild and pleasant, and everything passed off pleasantly without drawback or accident. At half past four the Clinton and Adrian delegations returned to their respective homes, all apparently mutually satisfied with the festivities of their Saturday's recreation. We omitted to notice some very pretty and significant banners which distinguish'd the several School departments of the Adrian School delegation, and we would like the preparation of similar banners for the use of our several School departments, on future occasions of festivity. The exercises of the day were also greatly enlivened by the Tecumseh Brass Band, who kindly tendered their services for the occasion, and also by vocal music from the Adrian School Choir under the direction of Prof. Kimball.

In addition to the cultivation of a mutual interest and sympathy between the different Schools of the county, we deem the occasion to have been one of more substantial advantage to our Educational interests here, by calling a more public attention to the present prosperous condition of our Schools, and the increased advantage and facilities afforded by our recently built, and furnished, Union School building. We have now, we think, as fine buildings, and as well educated, well organized, and efficient corps of Teachers, as can anywhere be found in the State. So that we do not now hesitate to recommend the Tecumseh Union School, to any one who may desire to be informed of its condition, or to avail themselves of its advantages, as one affording facilities and advantages for a liberal and extensive study, not surpassed by any institution of the kind in the west.

A liberal effort is also made on the part of our citizens to see that facilities for board shall be brought within the convenience and reach of all who may desire it for the purpose of Study and education.

Tecumseh School District No 1 Sabbath School.

It will be recollected that, something more than a year ago, there was a Sabbath School celebration in the north east corner portion of this town, which was connected with the Sabbath School in the above district. This School was at first instituted by the Misses Stevens & Pomeroy, from Clinton, as a sort of missionary enterprise, and so fully has it succeeded, that it now numbers some forty or fifty scholars, and bids fair to become in interest and intelligence, one of the first Sabbath Schools in the town. There was at the first considerable opposition manifested to it, by some of the parents, and more of the ill disposed youth of that settlement, but all this has long since died out, or what is better, become changed to a hearty approval and support.

We had the pleasure, at the request of one of the instructors, of attending the School, on last Sabbath, and were much impressed with the good order, intelligence and earnestness, that seemed to pervade all its exercises. We wish the scholars of some other schools which have been much longer established, and have enjoyed much greater general educational advantages, could visit, and drink in largely of the spirit and energy, that so manifestly pervade and control its pupils, in the fulfillment of their weekly task. Excelsior is not with them a meaningless motto, but an attainable excellence towards which they not only aspire, but which they expect ultimately to reach.

The Pennsylvania Relief Bill.

The following is an abstract of the bill at the extra session of the Pennsylvania Legislature, legalizing the suspension of the banks:

Sec. 1. Suspends all penalties and forfeitures to banks for not paying specie, till the second Monday in April next, but limits dividends declared during the period of suspension to six per cent.

Sec. 2. Requires the publication of weekly statements from the city banks and monthly from the country banks of their condition. The statement to be sworn to by the President or Cashier.—The penalty for neglect of this is a fine of from $500 to $1000.

Sec 3. Requires the suspended banks to receive each other's notes but on oath of the President and a majority of the Board of Trustees of any bank, that they believe any other bank to be insolvent, the Governor shall appoint commissioners to investigate.

Sec. 4. Authorizes the collectors of taxes, tolls, and other state revenues, to receive notes of the suspended banks.

Sec. 5. Provides that the suspended banks must pay specie on all debts or deposits due the state, and on all their notes which are now, or may hereafter be in the State Treasury.

Sec. 6. Grants a stay of execution on all debts, judgments, bonds and mortgages for one year.

Sec. 7. Provides that the Act shall take effect immediately, and states the terms on which the banks shall shall accept its provisions, one of which is the paying to the State ¼ of 1 per cent, of the capital stock of the banks.

Sec. 8. Repeals the 47th section of the the "Act Regulating Banks." (This 47th section provides penalty and forfeitures of charter, &c., for suspension of specie payment.)

Sec. 9. Reserves the right of annulling &c., the charters of all banks accepting this act.

Sec. 10. Forbids a bank to shave notes of any other bank in the State.

Sec 11. That no stocks, bonds, promissory notes, personal property, or other valuable securities, hypothecated or held in pledge, either with power of attorney attached or otherwise, for credit, or money loaned, shall be sold for the period of six months from the passage of this act, without the consent of the debtor, debtors, or party hypothecating or pledging the same, being first had and obtained in writing.

Sec. 12. That the notice required for payment provided in the charters of savings fund and trust companies, in all sums exceeding $100, be, and the same is hereby extended for the period of two months, during the period of suspension of specie payment authorized by this act.

Origin of Paper Money

The Count de Tendilla, while besieged by the Moors in the fortress of Alhambra was destitute of gold and silver wherewith to pay his soldiers who began to murmur, as they had not the means of purchasing the necessaries of life from the people of the town. "In this dilemma, (says the historian) what does this most sagacious commander? He takes a large number of little morsels of paper on which he inscribes various sums, and signs them with his own hand and name. These did he give to the soldiery in earnest of their pay. 'How,' you will say, "are soldiers to be paid with scraps of paper?" Even so, and well paid too, as I will presently make manifest, for the good count issued a proclamation, ordering the inhabitants to take these morsels of paper for the full amount thereon inscribed, promising to redeem them at a future time with gold and silver. Thus, by subtle and most miraculous alchemy, did this cavalier turn worthless paper into gold and silver, and make his late impoverished army abound in money." The historian adds, "The Count de Tendilla redeemed his promises like a loyal knight; and this miracle, as it appeared in the eyes of the worthy Agapida, is the first instance on record of paper money, which has since spread throughout the civilized world the most unbounded opulence."

The "Panic" in Europe

The English press, by the last advices take a very gloomy view of financial affairs. The revulsions in the United States are so much more disastrous than was anticipated, that they have produced great depression. The news by the Europa, which arrived out on the 5th inst., "exercised a very marked influence on the business operations of the day." The advices were considered very unsatisfactory in character. The opinion that the state of affairs would induce a drain of specie from England was very generally entertained. On the 31 and 5th, £149,000 in gold were drawn from the bank, and on the 8th under the continued drain the rate of interest was raised from 5½ per cent., at which it had stood since July 16, to six per cent., a step which, says the Times, "took the public by surprise, because they were not prepared for the extraordinary news by the two last American mails."

From the Jamaica Despatch, Aug 25.

Fearful Atrocity by the Indians of the South American Coast.

By the Royal Mail steamer Conway; several seamen lately belonging to the schooner Endeavor, of this port, arrived here from Carthagena, via St. Thomas. They report a frightful atrocity committed by the Indians of the South American Coast upon the master and crew of that vessel.

The endeavor left Kingston on Tuesday, the 16th of June, having cleared out for Maracaibo. A few days after she experienced very severe weather, carrying away her jibstay and topsail. She was forced to put into the port of Anse d' Hareault, on the southwest corner of Hayti. She remained there and repaired, and sailed two days after for her destination. The weather was again boisterous and the schooner having again carried away some sails, she put into Cape La Vela on the Main, where her injuries were repaired.

Capt Anthony Durant had three Indians on board, whom he had brought to Jamaca with him on his last return from the Main, and every attention was shown them by the Captain, who in fact was always kind towards them, even while in Kingston. The vessel arrived off the Indian coast on the evening of the 8th July, and came to anchor at Bay Honda, to which place the Indians on board belonged. The Indians were immediately landed, and about seven o'clock the next morning a boat loaded with Indians, to the number of 15, boarded the schooner and lined the gangway. The captain not imagining any danger from their presence, was wholly unprepared for an attack, and was speaking near by to one of the seamen, when suddenly some seven Indians simultaneously drew their knives (which were hid in their girdles) and commenced to assassinate the captain; they inflicted numerous stabs all over his body, which soon brought him to the deck in a senseless state, the blood pouring along his body in a profuse manner. He made several ineffectual attempts at resistance. The cook, who was in the galley, preparing breakfast, was also attacked by them and killed, with scarcely any chance of resistance; meanwhile, the mate, Mr. Madano, was personally engaged with two of the Indians, who dealt him a severe blow over the head but with an almost unexampled degree of strength, he held each by the throat with his hands, and bringing himself on his knees, he throttled them in such a manner as when he let go his hold they staggered. The panic on board among the seamen was intense, and no one being prepared for such an encounter, the confusion and horror which prevailed at the time may be better imagined than described.

A white sailor seeing the helpless state of the crew, immediately jumped overboard, and then took to the boat which was alongside; another young man named Lewis Lacoste, of this city, who had been taking a sea voyage for the benefit of his health, was the third person who left the vessel. He jumped overboard, and not being able to swim, sank, and rose no more. Another seaman from the vessel succeeded in getting into the boat. The mate, after the wrestling with the two Indians, and seeing no other chance for his life, made one desperate leap from the ship and was soon in the boat. He cut the painter which held the Indian's boat alongside to the vessel, and the four parties took to work with the paddles. The Endeavor's boat was ashore with three of the hands in her; and these, perceiving what was going on, shoved off and met the Indian boat (a whaling boat belonging to the brig Radviant, stranded some time ago off the same coast, which contained the four who had left the ship,) and joined her, sending the Endeavor's boat adrift. Meanwhile the steward, who was in the hold of the vessel when this sanguineous proceeding commenced, was set upon by these bloodthirsty assassins and soon fell a corpse from the thrusts of the Indian knives. The Indians sacked the vessel and plundered all the stores and provisions, and, as was subsequently ascertained, ran the vessel ashore.

The boat with the seven souls which survived this sad tragedy, after pulling against the wind some sixty miles, fell in with some vessels, and got refreshed, and some canvass having been provided them, they set sail the next morning and reached Rio de la Hache in safety, where they communicated with the Consul. They remained here for fully three weeks, and took passage for Santa Martha, thence to Carthagena, and from that place they went on to St. Thomas, and arrived at Kingston on Sunday, in the Royal Mail steamer Conway.

Capt Durant was a trader to the Spanish Main for upwards of thirty years, and had endeared himself to many of the natives. He failed on this melancholy occasion to observe the necessary precaution of not allowing more than a certain number to come on board at one time, and this fatal error on his part has led to the sacrifice both of valuable lives and property to some amount. The Captain, however, was too confident of the good feeling of the natives towards him—so much so that he forgot to arm himself to repel their attack. The steward was a native of this city, and the cook a Frenchman.

The Endeavor was owned by S. M. Samuel, of this city.

FORESTVILLE, N Y Oct. 23.

At half past 3 o'clock this afternoon we felt the shock of an earthquake, which lasted about five minutes.

CINCINNATTI, Oct. 23.

About 7 o'clock this evening, a fire broke out in the large sugar refinery belonging to Kilbreath, McKenzie & Co. Loss about 30,000, fully insured.

CHICAGO, Oct. 23.

The Propeller Reindeer, running between here and Montreal, went to pieces at Point Au Sable on Monday. All the crew were lost but two.

BUFFALO, Oct. 23.

A distinct shock of an earthquake was felt throughout the city, at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes this afternoon, lasting several seconds. The people rushed out of buildings. No damage was done.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 23.

The fire in State Prison commenced in shops at north end, at half past 7, and has already destroyed all the shops in that portion of the yard. The steam fire engine and our other engines were promptly on ground, but not before the flames attained such headway that it was feared the main building would also be destroyed.—It was doubtless the work of incendiaries. Loss of stock computed at from 25 to $30,000, not including damage to buildings. By strenuous efforts the flames were confined to shops at north end of yard, which are wholly destroyed.

NEW YORK, Oct 24.

The Brig Anglo Saxon, has been dispatched from Boston to Point Au Prince, with documental evidence which it is hoped will fully exonerate Capt Mayo, and all accused from the charge of any complicity with the introduction of counterfeit paper money into the Hayton dominions.

The subscription to the Erie loan reached about $700,000. The directors have voted that hereafter no floating debt exceeding $250,000 shall be created, unless by a vote of the stockholders. The receipts of the Erie R. R. thus far in October, are only $22,000 behind those of the same time last year.

Arrangements have been made by which the Illinois Central R R will be able to resume payment on its coupons on Monday next. A circular has been issued to its stockholders, giving a statement of its condition on the second of Oct.

The steamship Vanderbilt sailed to day for Southampton and Havre, with 309 passengers—no specie.

The Secretary of War visited Governor's Island, and was received by a national salute.

WASHINGTON, Oct 24.

So far from the British Cabinet having under discussion the propriety of the recall of the troops from India, as reported by an alleged letter from Mr. Dallas, it is, at the latest accounts received this morning about to make renewed exertions for the suppression of the mutiny. The statement may here be made on authority that it is not the intention of the British Government to have recourse to foreign enlistments in the present emergency, though it is sensible of the good intention of many parties who have offered their services in India.

The Virginia Synod of the Presbyterian Church, have adopted the report of the Committee presented yesterday, recommending a withdrawal from the General Assembly in consequence of the action of that body on the Slavery question; the vote being 32 against 3. The nays were Messrs Sunderland & Haskell, of Washington, and Dunning of Baltimore. The Synod adopted a resolution approving the resolutions adopted by a portion of the Church, which lately met at Richmond and pledging itself to cordially go operate in the organization of the united Synod of the Presbyterian Church.

The British Government will take no steps in the Nicaragua Transit, except in conjunction with the U. S. None of the alleged contracts with Costa Rica on this subject has been made with the countenance of England. Of all this our Government is well informed.

QUEBEC, Oct 24.

The Canadian Company's steamship North American, sailed at 10 o'clock this morning, with upwards of 200 passengers for Liverpool.

TORONTO, Oct 27.

Ross, Mitchell & Co., a heavy importing house of this city, failed this morning. Liabilities $1 250,000. Their failure will probably pull down many country houses. The reported failure of Mayor Hutchinson, wholesale grocer, is incorrect.

NEW YORK, Oct. 27.

The Atlantic left for Liverpool this morning at 8 o'clock.

Jno. P Williams, of Utica, and more recently attached to the Japan Expedition as telegraph operator, and in command of a river steamer died at Morco in July, after an illness of six weeks, superinduced by eating the poisoned bread at Hong Kong in December last.

Volume Eight.

One more issue will close the present volume of the Tecumseh Herald.—The 8th volume will commence Thursday, Nov. 5th. It is our intention to settle all our bills to that date, and expect our friends will do the same by us. As will be seen in the proceedings at the Printer's Convention, all have agreed to do cash business; we signed the ticket and will hereafter consider it as sacred. All persons owing us, will receive their bills, and we hope they will be cheerfully paid, otherwise their names will be erased from our books.

List of Good Money.

The Bank of Tecumseh:

☞ We are obliged to work a half sheet this week, on account of the non-arrival of paper.

☞ Miss T. J Losey has received her Fall and Winter supply of Millinery, which she offers to her customers at a bargain.

☞ The new Bridge over Evan's creek is completed, and pronounced by all 'just the thing.'

☞ Emerson & Stocking are refusing money on account, but are taking all kind of produce. Fred'is intending to marry soon, and is anxious to secure a supply of eatables.

☞ Fifty eight loads of Wheat were sold in the streets of Jonesville, on Tuesday last.

PAPER FOR SALE.—We learn that the proprietor of the Maumee Amulet desires to dispose of that paper. A good opening for somebody—industriously and editorially inclined.

☞ The total number of failures in New York City since the first of August, is about 900, and the liabilities are estimated at ninety millions. During the whole of the revulsion in 1837, the number of failures reported in the same city was about 500, but the returns under the Bankrupt Law in 1841, showed that five thousand took the benefit of that act, showing liabilities amounting to nearly fifty millions of dollars.

QUICK WORK.—At a late fire in Cincinnati, an individual who happened to be at the door of the steam fire engine house, thus describes the effect: "The firemen, who were sitting near the stove, sprang instantly to their different posts; one applied a lighted match to the prepared fuel beneath the boiler; another lit the lamps; others got ready the excited and impatient horses, who started from their stalls at the first peal of the bell; and in precisely one minute and twenty-eight seconds the engine started from the house into the street."

Tecumseh Bank

This Bank is still running, and is the only one now in the State paying specie. Well, this is laughable. The Detroit Banks kicked it off months ago as unworthy of credit and now it is alive and kicking, while the breath has been knocked out of them and their doors closed. The Banks in Detroit have taken a course that merits the condemnation of every man.—They discarded all Western money, which they had received it on deposit, would have been far better for them and the business men of Detroit. We cannot regard the Bankers of Detroit as the Sons of the world, and we do not know that any one will shed tears over their suspension. Western money is now good, while Detroit bills are selling at 30 per cent discount.—Jonesville Tel.

☞ Bayard Taylor states that the fishermen on the coast of Norway are supplied with wood from the tropics, by the Gulf Stream.

"SLANG."—"Dry up!" was an expressive phrase, but the boys in the streets have found a better one. Now they say, "Suspend!"

☞ A Wisconsin correspondent of the Chester Union states that in going from Prairie du Chien to La Crosse, a few days since, a singular scene was presented on the steamboat. At one end of the long saloon, a clergyman was preaching to a small crowd gathered around him; in the middle, gambling was in busy progress; and at the other extremity of the saloon there was music and dancing!

☞ The Philadelphia ladies, on Friday last, came out in their full suits of winter furs.

☞ A correspondent proposes that the Common Council of our city should vote at least $100,000 to be raised by a tax or loan, to furnish immediate means for transportation to the most favored localities in the West, to as many persons as are desirous of leaving the city to seek employment there. There is a vast amount of profitable work to be obtained in the young and growing Western and Southern States of the Union, by those who cannot obtain it here. The idea seems a good one for the winter looks dark and gloomily to the poor.—N. Y. Mirror.

☞ Look out for counterfeit 5 and 10 Dollars! In these stringent specie times the sight of change should not relax the vigilance of our dealers in looking out for bogus coin. The counterfeiters are taking advantage of the position of financial affairs and the general discredit which has befallen paper money, to circulate their "pewter." Other cities are suffering from their "base issues"—let our merchants be on their guard.

CONTRACTING.—Under the pressure of the times, the Chicago papers are talking seriously of reducing the size of their pages one column each, during the winter, as advertising is very light, and the publishers are not disposed to fill up at an extra expense the vacuum caused by the diminution of paying matter in their advertising columns. We believe that a similar reduction has been proposed in Buffalo.

HOW IT AFFECTS NEWSPAPERS.—Hard times among the newspapers is becoming as palpable as in any other branch of industry. The St Louis Daily Intelligencer has been united with the Evening News of the same city, and the joint issue will hereafter be published as an afternoon paper. The three Republican papers in Dubuque, Iowa, are to be formed into one. The Republican and Whig, at Quincy, Illinois, were also to be joined in one, and the St Paul times and Minnesotian, are likely to follow suit soon. In Philadelphia, the Times and Sun have been merged in one paper.

THE GIRL AND HER FILLY.—A Miss Adcock, of Henderson Grove, Ill., took the first premium (a gold watch worth $150,) at the recent House Exhibition at Galesburgh, in that State. She rode without a saddle, and dismounted to show that she was not retained by a stirrup.—Her riding was stylish, and elicited unbounded applause.

ERROR.—We quoted Wheat last week a little above the market, but as none came to town, it made no difference, except a few criticisms.

☞ A heavy train of cars, are loading at Toledo, with goods, marked A Anderson & Co., which will be displayed, in "a Few Days."

☞ Alf Howard gives two Concerts, at Coldwater, on Saturday and Monday evenings next. We may expect a treat from him yet.

From the Detroit Advertiser 14th.

Children Murdered for Money.

A gentleman named Johnson, recently moved to Fentenville, with his family, consisting of a wife and three children—the oldest of the latter but eight years of age.—Not having got all his bedcup, the wife remained at the hotel over night, while Mr. Johnson went to his house with the children and was accompanied by a boy named George Colwell, about 17 years of age. About 8 o'clock in the evening, two young men came in asking for Mr. Johnson, saying they were going to his father's house, a short distance from there. On receiving a pressing invitation they consented to remain over night and go with him in the morning to see the old gentleman. Mr Johnston slept that night in the bed with his two little girls, and the boy slept with Colwell. The young men had a bed made up on the floor, between the other two.

During the night Mr Johnson heard one of his girls cry out "Pa!" and at the same time received a blow on the side of his head. He was partially stunned, and the next he remembered, he was running after a man who was attempting to escape by the door.—The man turned again, and struck at him with some instrument.

Mr J followed the fellow some distance without being able to overtake him, and therefore returned to the house. On entering the room where he had been sleeping, a horrible sight met his eyes—one of the little girls and the Colwell boy lay dead before him, and the other little girl and boy insensible from the effect of their injuries. The agonized father screamed "murder!" and called in the neighbors. Several came in, and on examination the following particulars were disclosed.

The first body examined was that of young Colwell. He had received a blow, apparently from an axe. His skull was split entirely open, and his brains had all run out. The little boy who lay beside Colwell, had been struck twice in the head by an axe or a hatchet, and once in the abdomen. One of the little girls who slept with her father, had received several wounds in the head and body from a similar instrument. She was dead. The other girl had a cut in the head, apparently from a slanting blow from the axe, which had taken a portion of the scalp. The father himself had received two blows on the top of the head, and a severe cut inside of his hand. The little girl is doing well, but at four o'clock last night, when our informant left, the boy was not expected to recover. Suspicion rests upon two young fellows who had recently had some difficulty about some gambling operations. Mr Johnston had about $400, and it is supposed that they were aware of it, and took this means of gaining possession of it, killing the children that there should be no evidence against them.

Secondly on Short Credit.
Thirdly, had to take Long Credit, Orders and Accounts.

Lastly, I have been compelled to wait for payment of Goods sold on Six Months time, long enough for a man to visit California, get rich, and return. Before payment could be forced or coaxed.

Now I wish to say, to my numerous friends and patrons, that I am thoroughly convinced that the mode of buying goods on time is both injurious to the buyer and seller.

I will hereafter Sell for Ready pay, at such prices that will defy all competion in this Town, State, or the United States.

CONSOLIDATION OF

Emerson's Magazine

AND

Putnam's Monthly.

40,000 Subscribers to Start With

The Publishers are happy to announce that in the new Magazine for 1858 the best literary and artistic talent of both publications has been secured and the most attractive features of each will be retained in the consolidated work.

It will be, by agreement in its pages, the choicest productions of American thinkers and writers, and the best efforts of American artists.

It will be purely national in its character. In its criticisms it will aim to be just and truthful, and will be especially progressive and cultivate that wholesome moral and religious tone so highly cherished by the better class public, and so essential to the welfare of the race.

It shall in every way, as far as care and money can make it, be a Magazine that in its reviews of the literary contents, and in the beauty and profuseness of its pictorial illustrations, shall entitle it by publication ever before presented in this country.

The new issue commences with the October number which is now ready. It is filled with the choicest original matter by some of the most brilliant writers of the day and is embellished by a splendid, forty-four splendid original engravings. It appears in a new dress, designed an elegant colored design on the cover and the entire work presents the most attractive appearance. In typography and illustration it is the most beautiful specimen of a magazine ever issued in this country.

We are Growing Old

We are growing older with each day up-
A dark, sad thought will come,
And we who are so active now
Will rest in a narrow home.
We are growing old—but still can breathe
In fact as young and gay
As the time when autumn's bright morn
In life's unclouded day!
And will she ever—those sunlight eyes
Look old and faded too?
Their rose-bright cheeks so young, so pure,
Light up with dying glow?
Ah! yes, the flower will lose its charms,
And droop away, and die,
But, oh! 'twill rise and bloom again
Bright as the glorious sky.
Then what if we are growing old,
No change our heart shall know,
They'll beat with rapture and we'll feel
That God has made them so.

The Earthquake at St Louis

(From the St. Louis Republican, 9th.)

Yesterday morning the city was visited by one of those mighty convulsions of nature which set the world to shaking.—Two distinct shocks of an earthquake were sensibly felt from the one end of our city to the extremest verge. Majestic edifices reared by the labor of man, rocked upon their bases, the earth moved from her accustomed rectitude and quaked beneath us, the river was raised in a tumult, and many men shook with fear and trembling.

The evening of Wednesday was calm and the moon rolled in extraordinary brilliancy upon the city. Towards night a slight humidity gathered over us, and later this increased to a dense fog. Men went to their peaceful slumbers and wetted not whereof they awoke at early cock crow. But so it was: at a few minutes after four o'clock half the citizens of St Louis were agog, with their heads jutting from the windows of their apartments, or rushing into the streets en dishabille, terrified at the confusion which they experienced, and which seemed to compass them.

The first shock was distinctly felt.—There were but few persons whose slumbers were so heavy that they did not experience it. From such persons as we conversed with, and from our own sensations, we believe it was felt about ten minutes after four P. M., lasting about thirty seconds. Its first effect was not of great force, but as it rolled along it grew gradually stronger, until in its heavings it seemed to be rocking to and fro. Then people awoke as their windows rattled, as their beds swayed, and as the light articles which mounted their mantelpieces fell to the floor. There was a grand rush to the windows, and heads hung out, with alarm depicted upon the countenance which distinguished them; other people found their way into the middle of the streets, where they felt somewhat more secure until the thing was over.

A second shock was felt shortly after but there are no two people who agree as to the length of time which elapsed between the two. It was not very violent, the more especially as compared with the former quake; its force, however, was sufficient to make the still waking people feel the tremulous motion of their beds.

The accompaniment of the shocks can be placed in but one aspect of resemblance as to ordinary noises. There was a great rumbling, like the passage of a heavy vehicle over pavements, while the shock itself may be aptly likened to the effect produced by the working of a steam engine, which after laboring to pass the centre lets itself gently down.

We have not yet heard of any great amount of actual damage done. Some few small articles were broken in many houses by falling. A three story house occupied by Mr. Landry, on Washington street, was cracked from top to bottom.—Bells were rung in several houses, as for instance, in that of Dr. McPheeters, and some few people on their more natural waking had temporarily lost their senses, as for example, one gentleman of the bar who, living near the college, could not with all his eyes discover the steeple.

The shocks were distinctly felt, not only in the city but all around. It seemed to come in a southerly, or perhaps southwesterly direction, extending, as we learn, for miles on either side of us. The wide prairies of Illinois felt the jar, the cities below us experienced its effect, and perhaps more forcibly than we.

Tecumseh Union School Mass-Meeting, &c.

The Educational Mass Meeting, which was held under the auspices and direction of the State Teacher's Association, in our village on Saturday last, convened at the Union School Hall as proposed at 10 o'clock A. M. A special train brought up the Adrian School consisting of about five hundred scholars under the charge of Prof. Hubbard and the other Teachers, Clinton, Macon, Ridgeway and Franklin were also largely represented, and our own schools, under the charge of Prof Lawton and the other Teachers, numbering about four hundred pupils, were also in attendance, so that upon the opening of the morning exercises there were from six hundred to one thousand scholars in actual attendance, besides the Teachers and other persons.

Addresses were made by Profs. Lawton and Hubbard, also by Prof. Eaton, Superintendent of the Toledo High Schools, Rev J. M. Gregory, Editor of the Journal of Education, and Judge C A. Stacy of Tecumseh. Judge Beaman of Adrian was prevented by ill health from attendence.

The schools and visitors then adjourned from the School building to a collation at Union Hall, after which there was a spontaneous assemblage, consisting indiscriminately of students and citizens which were again addressed by Messrs Stacy and Baxter.

The day was mild and pleasant, and everything passed off pleasantly without drawback or accident. At half past four the Clinton and Adrian delegations returned to their respective homes, all apparently mutually satisfied with the festivities of their Saturday's recreation. We omitted to notice some very pretty and significant banners which distinguished the several School departments of the Adrian School delegation, and we would like the preparation of similar banners for the use of our several School departments, on future occasions of festivity. The exercises of the day were also greatly enlivened by the Tecumseh Brass Band, who kindly tendered their services for the occasion, and also by vocal music from the Adrian School Choir under the direction of Prof Kimball.

In addition to the cultivation of a mutual interest and sympathy between the different Schools of the county, we deem the occasion to have been one of more substantial advantage to our Educational interests here, by calling a more public attention to the present prosperous condition of our Schools, and the increased advantage and facilities afforded by our recently built and furnished, Union School building. We have now, we think, as fine buildings, and an as well educated, well organized, and efficient, corps of Teachers, as can anywhere be found in the State. So that we do not now hesitate to recommend the Tecumseh Union School, to any one who may desire to be informed of its condition, or to avail themselves of its advantages, as one affording facilities and advantages for a liberal and extensive study, not surpassed by any institution of the kind in the west.

A liberal effort is also made on the part of our citizens to see that facilities for board shall be brought within the convenience and reach of all who may desire it for the purpose of Study and education.

Tecumseh School District No 1 Sabbath School.

It will be recollected that something more than a year ago, there was a Sabbath School celebration in the north eastern portion of this town, which was connected with the Sabbath School in the above district. This School was at first instituted by the Misses Stevens & Pomeroy, from Clinton, as a sort of missionary enterprise, and so fully has it succeeded that it now numbers some forty or fifty scholars, and bids fair to become in interest and intelligence, one of the first Sabbath Schools in the town. There was at the first considerable opposition manifested to it, by some of the parents, and more of the ill disposed youth of that settlement, but all this has long since died out, or what is better, become changed to a hearty approval and support.

We had the pleasure, at the request of one of the instructors, of attending the School, on last Sabbath, and were much impressed with the good order, intelligence and earnestness, that seemed to pervade all its exercises. We wish the scholars of some other schools which have been much longer established, and have enjoyed much greater general educational advantages, could visit, and drink in largely of the spirit and energy, that so manifestly pervade and control its pupils, in the fulfillment of their weekly task. Excelsior is not with them a meaningless motto, but an attainable excellence towards which they not only aspire, but which they expect ultimately to reach.

The Pennsylvania Relief Bill

The following is an abstract of the bill at the extra session of the Pennsylvania Legislature, legalizing the suspension of the banks:

Sec 1 Suspends all penalties and forfeitures to banks for not paying specie, till the second Monday in April next, but limits dividends declared during the period of suspension to six per cent.

Sec. 2. Requires the publication of weekly statements from the city banks and monthly from the country banks of their condition. The statement to be sworn to by the President or Cashier.—The penalty for neglect of this is a fine of from $500 to $1000.

Sec 3 Requires the suspended banks to receive each other's notes but on oath of the President and a majority of the Board of Trustees of any bank, that they believe any other bank to be insolvent, the Governor shall appoint commissioners to investigate.

Sec 4. Authorizes the collectors of taxes, tolls, and other state revenues, to receive notes of the suspended banks

Sec 5 Provides that the suspended banks must pay specie on all debts or deposits due the state, and on all their notes which are now, or may hereafter be in the State Treasury.

Sec 6 Grants a stay of execution on all debts, judgments, bonds and mortgages for one year.

Sec. 7. Provides that the Act shall take effect immediately, and states the terms on which the banks shall shall accept its provisions, one of which is the paying to the State ¼ of 1 per cent, of the capital stock of the banks.

Sec. 8. Repeals the 47th section of the the "Act Regulating Banks" (This 47th section provides penalty and forfeitures of charter, &c., for suspension of specie payment)

Sec. 9. Reserves the right of annulling &c, the charters of all banks accepting this act.

Sec 10. Forbids a bank to shave notes of any other bank in the State

Sec 11 That no stocks, bonds, promissory notes, personal property, or other valuable securities, hypothecated or held in pledge, either with power of attorney attached or otherwise, for credit, or money loaned, shall be sold for the period of six months from the passage of this act, without the consent of the debtor, debtors, or party hypothecating or pledging the same, being first had and obtained in writing.

Sec. 12. That the notice required for payment provided in the charters of savings fund and trust companies, in all sums exceeding $100, be, and the same is hereby extended for the period of two months, during the period of suspension of specie payment authorized by this act.

Origin of Paper Money

The Count de Tendilla, while besieged by the Moors in the fortress of Alhambra was destitute of gold and silver wherewith to pay his soldiers, who began to murmur as they had not the means of purchasing the necessaries of life from the people of the town. "In this dilemma, (says the historian) what does this most sagacious commander? He takes a large number of little morsels of paper on which he inscribes various sums, and signs them with his own hand and name. These did he give to the soldiery in earnest of their pay. 'How,' you will say, "are soldiers to be paid with scraps of paper?" Even so, and well paid too, as I will presently make manifest, for the good count issued a proclamation, ordering the inhabitants to take these morsels of paper for the full amount thereon inscribed, promising to redeem them at a future time with gold and silver. Thus, by subtle and most miraculous alchemy, did this cavalier turn worthless paper into gold and silver, and make his late impoverished army abound in money." The historian adds, "The Count de Tendilla redeemed his promises like a loyal knight; and this miracle, as it appeared in the eyes of the worthy Agapida, is the first instance on record of paper money, which has since spread throughout the civilized world the most unbounded opulence."

The "Panic" in Europe

The English press, by the last advices take a very gloomy view of financial affairs. The revulsions in the United States are so much more disastrous than was anticipated, that they have produced great depression. The news by the Europa, which arrived out on the 5th inst., "exercised a very marked influence on the business operations of the day." The advices were considered very unsatisfactory in character. The opinion that the state of affairs would induce a drain of specie from England was very generally entertained. On the 3d and 5th, £149,000 in gold were drawn from the bank, and on the 8th under the continued drain, the rate of interest was raised from 5 per cent., at which it had stood since July 16, to six per cent., a step which, says the Times, "took the public by surprise, because they were not prepared for the extraordinary news by the two last American mails."

Fearful Atrocity by the Indians of the South American Coast.

By the Royal Mail steamer Conway, several persons lately belonging to the schooner Endeavor, of this port, arrived here from Carthagena, via St. Thomas. They report a frightful atrocity committed by the Indians of the South American Coast upon the master and crew of that vessel.

The endeavor left Kingston on Tuesday, the 16th of June, having cleared out for Maricaibo. A few days after she experienced very severe weather, carrying away her jibstay and topsail. She was forced to put into the port of Anse d' Harnault, on the southwest corner of Hayti. She remained there and repaired, and sailed two days after for her destination. The weather was again boisterous and the schooner having again carried away some sails, she put into Cape La Vela on the Main, where her injuries were repaired.

Capt Anthony Durant had three Indians on board, whom he had brought to Jamaica with him on his last return from the Main, and every attention was shown them by the Captain, who in fact was always kind towards them, even while in Kingston. The vessel arrived off the Indian coast on the evening of the 8th July, and came to anchor at Bay Honda, to which place the Indians on board belonged. The Indians were immediately landed, and about seven o'clock the next morning a boat loaded with Indians, to the number of 15, boarded the schooner and lined the gangway. The captain not imagining any danger from their presence, was wholly unprepared for an attack, and was speaking near by to one of the seamen, when suddenly some seven Indians simultaneously drew their knives (which were hid in their girdles) and commenced to assassinate the captain; they inflicted numerous stabs all over his body, which soon brought him to the deck in a senseless state, the blood pouring along his body in a profuse manner. He made several ineffectual attempts at resistance. The cook, who was in the galley, preparing breakfast, was also attacked by them and killed, with scarcely any chance of resistance; meanwhile, the mate, Mr. Maduro, was personally engaged with two of the Indians, who dealt him a severe blow over the head, but with an almost unexampled degree of strength, he held each by the throat with his hands, and bringing himself on his knees, he throttled them in such a manner as when he let go his hold they staggered. The panic on board among the seamen was intense, and no one being prepared for such an encounter, the confusion and horror which prevailed at the time may be better imagined than described.

A white sailor, seeing the helpless state of the crew, immediately jumped overboard, and then took to the boat which was alongside; another young man named Lewis Lacoste, of this city, who had been taking a sea voyage for the benefit of his health, was the third person who left the vessel. He jumped overboard, and not being able to swim, sank, and rose no more. Another seaman from the vessel succeeded in getting into the boat. The mate, after the wrestling with the two Indians, and seeing no other chance for his life, made one desperate leap from the ship and was soon in the boat. He cut the painter which held the Indian's boat alongside to the vessel, and the four parties took to work with the paddles. The Endeavor's boat was ashore with three of the hands in her; and these, perceiving what was going on, shoved off and met the Indian boat (a whaling boat belonging to the brig Radviant, stranded some time ago off the same coast, which contained the four who had left the ship,) and joined her, sending the Endeavor's boat adrift. Meanwhile the steward, who was in the hold of the vessel when this sanguineous proceeding commenced, was set upon by these bloodthirsty assassins and soon fell a corpse from the thrusts of the Indian knives. The Indians sacked the vessel and plundered all the stores and provisions, and, as was subsequently ascertained, ran the vessel ashore.

The boat with the seven souls which survived this sad tragedy, after pulling against the wind some sixty miles, fell in with some vessels, and got refreshed, and some canvass having been provided them, they set sail the next morning and reached Rio de la Hache in safety, where they communicated with the Consul. They remained here for fully three weeks, and took passage for Santa Martha, thence to Carthagena, and from that place they went on to St. Thomas, and arrived at Kingston on Sunday, in the Royal Mail steamer Conway.

Capt. Durant was a trader to the Spanish Main for upwards of thirty years, and had endeared himself to many of the natives. He failed on this unfortunate occasion to observe the necessary precaution of not allowing more than a certain number to come on board at one time, and this fatal error on his part has led to the sacrifice both of valuable lives and property to some amount. The Captain, however, was too confident of the good feeling of the natives towards him—so much so that he forgot to arm himself to repel their attack. The steward was a native of this city, and the cook a Frenchman. The Endeavor was owned by S. M. Arnold, of this city.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 23.

About 7 o'clock this evening, a fire broke out in the large sugar refinery belonging to Ribeiraith, McKenzie & Co. Loss about 30,000, fully insured.

CHICAGO, Oct. 23.

The Propeller Reindeer, running between here and Montreal, went to peices at Point Au Sable on Monday. All the crew were lost but two.

BUFFALO, Oct. 23.

A distinct shock of an earthquake was felt throughout the city, at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes this afternoon, lasting several seconds. The people rushed out of buildings. No damage was done.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 23.

The fire in State Prison commenced in shops at north end, at half past 7, and has already destroyed all the shops in that portion of the yard. The steam fire engine and our other engines were promptly on ground, but not before the flames attained such headway that it was feared the main building would also be destroyed.—It was doubtless the work of incendiaries. Loss of stock computed at from 25 to $30,000, not including damage to buildings. By strenuous efforts the flames were confined to shops at north end of yard, which are wholly destroyed.

NEW YORK, Oct 24.

The Brig Anglo Saxon, has been dispatched from Boston to Point Au Prince, with documental evidence which it is hoped will fully exonerate Capt Mayo, and all accused from the charge of any complicity with the introduction of counterfeit paper money into the Hayton dominions.

The subscription to the Erie loan reached about $700,000. The directors have voted that hereafter no floating debt, exceeding $250,000 shall be created, unless by a vote of the stockholders. The receipts of the Erie R. R., thus far in October, are only $22,000 behind those of the same time last year.

Arrangements have been made by which the Illinois Central R R will be able to resume payment on its coupons on Monday next. A circular has been issued to its stockholders, giving a statement of its condition on the second of Oct.

The steamship Vanderbilt sailed to day for Southampton and Havre, with 300 passengers—no specie.

The Secretary of War visited Governor's Island, and was received by a national salute.

WASHINGTON, Oct 24

So far from the British Cabinet having under discussion the propriety of the recall of the troops from India, as reported by an alleged letter from Mr. Dallas, it is at the latest accounts received this morning about to make renewed exertions for the suppression of the mutiny. The statement may here be made on authority that it is not the intention of of the British Government to have recourse to foreign enlistments in the present emergency, though it is sensible of the good intention of many parties who have offered their services in India.

The Virginia Synod of the Presbyterian Church, have adopted the report of the Committee presented yesterday, recommending a withdrawal from the General Assembly in consequence of the action of that body on the Slavery question: the vote being 32 against 3. The nays were Messrs Sunderland & Haskell, of Washington, and Dunning of Baltimore. The Synod adopted a resolution approving the resolutions adopted by a portion of the Church, which lately met at Richmond and pledging itself to cordially co operates in the organization of the united Synod of the Presbyterian Church.

The British Government will take no steps in the Nicaragua Transit, except in conjunction with the U. S. None of the alleged contracts with Costa Rica on this subject has been made with the countenance of England. Of all this our Government is well informed.

QUEBEC, Oct. 24.

The Canadian Company's steamship North American, sailed at 10 o'clock this morning, with upwards of 200 passengers for Liverpool.

TORONTO, Oct. 27.

Ross, Mitchell & Co., a heavy importing house of this city, failed this morning. Liabilities $1,250,000. Their failure will probably pull down many country houses. The reported failure of Mayor Hutchinson, wholesale grocer, is incorrect.

NEW YORK, Oct. 27.

The Atlantic left for Liverpool this morning at 8 o'clock.

Jno. P Williams, of Utica, and more recently attached to the Japan Expedition, as telegraph operator, and in command of a river steamer died at Macao in July, after an illness of six weeks, superinduced by eating the poisoned bread at Hong Kong in December last.

The Song of the Street.

This parody on Sate's inimitable "Riding on a Rail," is quite amusing for its truthfulness just now. It is well enough to laugh, even at our misery. We find it in the N. Y. Eve. Post.

Rushing 'round the corners,
Chasing every friend,
Plunging into banks—
Nothing there to lend—
Piteously begging
Of every man you meet,
Bless me this is pleasant,
"Shinning" on the street.

Merchants very short,
Running neck and neck,
Wants to keep agoing—
Praying for a check;
Dabblers in stocks,
Blue as blue can be,
Evidently wishing
They were "fancy free."

All our splendid railroads
Got such dreadful knocks,
Twenty thousand bulls
Couldn't raise their stocks;
Many of the Bears,
In the trouble sharing,
Now begin to feel
They've been over-Bearing.

Risky speculators
Tumbling with the shock,
Never mind stopping,
More than any clock;
Still they give big dinners,
Smoke and drink and sup,
Going all the better
For a winding up.

Banking institutions,
Companies of 'trust,'
With other people's money,
Go off on a bust;
Houses of long standing
Crumbling in a night—
With so many 'smashes,'
No wonder money's TIGHT.

Gentlemen of means—
Having lots to spend—
Save a little sympathy,
Nothing have to lend;
Gentlemen in want—
Willing to pay double—
Finding they can borrow
Nothing now but trouble.

Half our men of business
Wanting an extension,
While nearly all the others
Contemplate suspension;
Many of them, though,
Don't appear to dread it;
Every cent they owe
Is so much to their credit.

Brokers all are breaking,
Credit is all cracked,
Women all expanding,
As the banks contract,
Panic still increasing—
Where will the trouble end.
While all hands want to borrow,
And nobody can lend!

Running 'round the corners,
Trying every source;
Asking at the banks—
Nothing there, of course,
Money getting tighter,
Misery complete—
Bless me! this is pleasant,
'Shinning' on the street.

Information Wanted.

There is how in this city (says a Fort Dodge paper,) at the house of Major Williams, a little boy who escaped the bloody massacre by the Indians' at Springfield, Minnesota Territory, about the 25th of March last, and who was brought to town by the volunteers who went up to the rescue. He says his name is John Sidman Stewart. We learn from some of the survivors of the massacre, that he is the son of Josiah Stewart, formerly of Indiana county, Pa. The boy says his grandfather's name was Fleming, (probably his mother's maiden name,) All the boy's family, father, mother, and two little sisters are among the murdered.

Also a young lady, about sixteen or seventeen years of age, named Elizabeth Gardner, whose family was also murdered, she only escaping the horrid fate. She says her father's name was Rolland Gardner, but she knows not the residence of any relatives Her father emigrated from the State of Indiana, and was formerly from Steuben county, New York.

Both are desirous of hearing from their relatives, if they have any; and all communications in reference to them, addressed to Major Williams, Fort Dodge, Webster county, Iowa, will be promptly answered. They will be kindly cared for till their friends come for them.

Newspapers throughout the United States will confer a favor by publishing the above.

PRETTY AND TRUE.—Flowers have bloomed on our prairies, and passed away, from age to age, unseen by man—and multitudes of virtues have been acted out in obscure places, without note or admiration. The sweetness of both has gone up to Heaven —Mrs. Sigourney.

TO COOK RICE.—Pick and wash it in cold water. To a pint of rice, put three quarts of boiling water, and a tea-spoonful of salt. Let it boil just seventeen minutes from the time it fairly comes to a boil; then pour off all the water, and set over a moderate fire with the saucepan uncovered; let it steam fifteen minutes.—Accuracy with regard to time is very important.

An Hour's Struggle with Poison.

I was spending some days, not many years ago, in a beautiful country village and in a family that had more than common attractions to one who loves domestic life as well as myself. The little circle had in it more of real interest than I have often seen developed in the same number of persons.

The father of the family—almost too young to feel that he was entitled to that honorable appellation—was a fine, frank-hearted, young mechanic, with a world of life bounding in his veins; an energy that, when fully aroused, drove everything violently before him; and a warmth of disposition that won him more friendship than it had then given him the goods of this world.

His wife, to whom he had been married for four years, was singularly beautiful.—They had two children—the one a laughing, brown-eyed and brown-haired little fairy of three years; her name was Eveleen. The second was a crowing, laughing, blue-eyed, plump little beauty of less than a year, promising to have all the charms of the elder at her age.

I was sitting one afternoon in a quiet little room, with my feet upon two chairs, reading a pleasant little book, in a state between sleep and awake—my host away at his shop a hundred yards off, and my pretty little hostess engaged in her household labors—when I was thrown out of my indolence by a scream that brought me to my feet like an electric shock. It was a woman's voice, and had in it an excess of agony that cannot be indicated in words; so loud that it rang over that quiet little village, and brought every one forth to ascertain the cause.

I sprang to the door that separated the sitting-room from the dining apartments, and saw the whole at a glance. The young mother stood at the door with her first born—our darling Eveleen—in her arms dying. A brief and hurried word from the servant told me the sad story.—The little girl had accompanid a child until up stairs, and while the attention of the older child was for a moment turned away, she seized a bottle of corrosive sublimate in alcohol, and had taken enough to have taken away twenty such lives.—The little thing had tottered down stairs, and the mother had met her at the landing with the empty bottle in her hand, and the poison oozing from her mouth, and the child all unconscious of the fearful thing she had done. Was it any wonder what a terrible shriek rang out over the quiet village, and that already the occupants of every house near were rushing toward the spot where the mother stood?

But a few moments could possibly have elapsed since the poison was taken, and yet the effect was already fearful. After the first shriek of terror the mother had quieted to a calm despair for the moment, and stood with the child in her arms, making no effort for its relief; and indeed, it seemed hopeless, for already the subtle poison seemed diffused through the frame; the brown eyes had lost their lustre; the face was blackened as in after death; and the teeth were tight set in a convulsive spasm that evidently would not pass away. I examined the little lost darling for a moment, saw that it was hopeless, and then turned away, unable to bear the mother's agony. The little door was already half filled with villagers; and sobs, and moans, and lamentations over the fate of the dying child were heard in every direction, mingled with quick and hurried questions as to the manner of its occurrence, and vain attempts at answering, which added an oppressing confusion to the sadness of the scene.
